ACCOUNTANTS AND THE LAW OF NEGLIGENCE

by R. W. V. DICKERSON, B.Com., LL.B., Ph.D., C.A.

A subject of great interest and concern to the accounting profession is the question of accountants' legal responsibility. At the present time no comprehensive volume fully covering the subject is available and this book is designed to fill this gap.

The book discusses in considerable detail the accountant's duty and standard of care, his liability to his clients and to third parties if negligence or fraud is proved. It covers his various responsibilities not only in his capacity as accountant and auditor but also as tax or business adviser, arbitrator and valuer.

A collection of fifty-seven leading Court cases in England, Ireland, South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, India and Canada, as well as cases in various States of the United States, are reprinted and arranged to suit the convenience of both accountants and lawyers.

Decisions which are reported in the standard law reports have not been reproduced but quotations more extensive than is usual in a legal textbook have been made from the judgments. In this way, the book is fully usable by those who do not have access to a law library.

Cases which are unreported or which have been reported only in a series of law reports now out of print or less well-known are reproduced in their entirety. For the unreported cases the official transcript of the Court's decision or the trial judge's summation has been used or, where this was impossible to obtain, the report as it appeared in a newspaper or other journal has been reproduced.

The author is a Canadian chartered accountant and lawyer who has practised in Canada as an accountant and later as a lawyer. He obtained a Ph.D. in taxation law at the London School of Economics and returned to Canada to join the Faculty of Law at the University of British Columbia. He is joint author with Professor G. S. A. Wheatcroft and others of Estate and Gift Taxation and has written numerous articles in legal and accounting journals.

His analysis covers, among other subjects, the legal aspects of these major areas:

DUTY OF CARE

Statutory and non-statutory audits
Dangers in unwritten audit contracts

STANDARD OF CARE

- responsibility for post-balance sheet events.

VERIFICATION OF PARTICULAR ITEMS AND TRANSACTIONS

What the Courts have had to say about verification procedures in particular circumstances
The auditor's responsibility for knowing the law, and the audit of a trustee's accounts.

THE MEASURE OF DAMAGES

How damages are assessed against an accountant who has been found negligent
Topics of consequential damages, reliance, remoteness and certainty of damage, prior remedies and mitigation of damages.

LIABILITIES OF THIRD PARTIES

The development of the law in this area on the responsibility of the accountant to persons other than his client.

OTHER DUTIES AND FUNCTIONS OF THE PROFESSIONAL ACCOUNTANT

Budget Issues

TWO factors more than any other must dominate the structure and content of the Budget which the CHANCELLOR will present on April 11th. They are the prospects for United Kingdom exports during the current year; and the extent to which the Government is prepared to allow the economy to drift without making any attempt to initiate a new phase of expansion lest it generates a fresh bout of cost-inflation and further balance of payments difficulties.

Concern with the forthcoming Budget stems primarily not from any tax increases which the CHANCELLOR may deem necessary to finance the enlarged Government expenditure for 1967–68, nor even any new impost which may have been conjured up by his advisers. The issue of real moment is whether the 1967 Budget will be designed to initiate a new phase of economic growth which can be sustained without fear of endangering sterling.

The consequences of permitting the economy to drift along in its present state are serious. First, it means that tax revenues are insufficiently buoyant to cover the Government's prospective spending. Secondly, whatever form of incomes policy may ultimately be evolved, some annual increase in pay is expected by the rank and file of workers; and, unfortunately, without a corresponding growth of industrial output, almost any increase in wages and salaries is bound to raise production costs. Finally, the inability of industry to satisfy the demands for manufactured products in periods of economic expansion is reflected in the large proportion of manufactured and semi-manufactured goods in the monthly import totals.

If imports are to be reduced, and it is essential that this be done, the most effective means is by increasing domestic production. Unfortunately, with the present slack in the economy, no industry is currently prepared to invest substantial funds in new capital equipment which will, at best, be under-utilized. Therefore, by 1968–69, when the next boom should be well under way, British industry will again be suffering the consequences of inadequate investment.

The Government would not dispute this diagnosis, while its back-benchers would add to the list the political consequences of the current unemployment reflected in the recent by-election results. The T.U.C. has urged upon the CHANCELLOR a measure of reflation, and at least one authoritative body of economists – the National Institute – is also anxious to see a modest degree of reflation. On the other hand, the risks involved in reflation, should it begin to get out of hand, are considerable. Only now are the real costs to the reserves of the 1964-65 sterling crisis becoming evident. There is little doubt that it would not take more than the merest suggestion that the Government's efforts of the past year were being undone by too rapid a reflation, to dissipate what may charitably be described as the new-found confidence in sterling.

The Government's caution in the matter is evident in the recent belated decision to reduce Bank rate several weeks after such a reduction was generally anticipated. The effectiveness of the new proposals for the incomes policy (discussed in the following article), remains to be seen; but unless the proposals more than match expectations, there is little justification for a significant lessening of the current squeeze. It would be a different matter if public sector expenditure showed any prospects of contraction. Unfortunately, this year's increase of £660 million in the Government estimates is likely to be only the forerunner of many such years.

If the economic situation were more buoyant, it is clear what the CHANCELLOR should do given this additional bill. He should raise taxes to close the gap between anticipated revenue on the basis of the current rates and the projected expenditure. But even in an expanding economy such a policy would be unpopular. To add to the nation's tax burdens in the present state of the economy would be not only politically unpopular, but could be economically disastrous. It could destroy once and for all such lingering hopes as industry may cherish that the era of expansion is only just round the corner.

In short, the CHANCELLOR must steer a difficult course between the Scylla of expansion which could drive him on to the reefs of balance of payments difficulties, and the Charybdis of prolonging the recession if he should deem it necessary to increase taxation. In the last resort the CHANCELLOR must be guided by the prospects for exports. However encouraging the recent expansion in monthly exports has been, and it is some 8 per cent above last year's figures, there are genuine doubts whether the momentum can long be maintained. It is on this particular issue that the National Institute of Economic and Social Research economists and the Bank of England disagree.

The results of the restrictions on overseas capital investment are such that the CHANCELLOR will not hesitate to commend them to Parliament during his address. Likewise, the out-turn of the invisible account is encouraging in so far as shipping is now contributing some net earnings, and transfers on dividends abroad will almost certainly be reduced during 1967. When every allowance is made for this improvement, there is no simple answer to the question whether it will continue. Quite apart from the fact that the buoyancy of world trading conditions is not subject to any action the U.K. can take, there remains the continuing risk that a revival of economic activity at home may once again divert domestic resources from export trade to internal markets.

The CHANCELLOR and his advisers may consider it possible to allow some reflation while at the same time increasing the tax revenues in 1967-68. The question is, What taxes are likely to be increased? Furthermore, What new taxes are possible? On the last point it is generally agreed that any new impost which came within the purview of the Inland Revenue would be regarded as an unfriendly act by the Revenue staffs, given their present difficulties. At most, the CHANCELLOR may now decide to close some of the loopholes which make estate duty a relatively disappointing revenue-earner. If the Government is really determined to hold to the 'nil' norm for wage increases during the year after June 30th, then some sop to the millions who will see little prospect of higher pay may well be deemed necessary, just as Mr WILSON last July felt that the 10 per cent surcharge on surtax payers exemplified the principles of social justice, even if it did nothing to help the economy.

The proviso, in last week's White Paper on incomes, relating to dividends has been matter for satisfaction in the stock-markets, but any tendency to try and take advantage thereof would certainly lead to higher rates of corporation tax. It would be foolish to imagine, if wage-earners are in general to abide by the 'nil' norm, that shareholders will fare any better during the same period. Another 5 per cent on the corporation tax would bring in £130 million and, if the CHANCELLOR should feel that some offset is required for the modest degree of reflation which he may feel is practicable, this is just the sort of tax increase that would fit into the present situation.

So far the Government does not seem to have been successful in defining the lowest-paid workers for purposes of the incomes policy. In fact, it would be more logical and practical in present circumstances to deal with this section of the population by higher welfare benefits. Since current tax revenues could hardly stand this extra cost, such increases to the lowest income group must be offset by reduction in the payments to the better-off. It is thus within the bounds of possibility that some tax allowances, e.g. the child allowances, could be partially replaced by enlarged but taxable cash family allowances. From the point of view of countering inflationary pressure, this would not be a sensible change since the tax will inevitably be met from such margin of income as remains for saving.

Stop-gap Incomes Policy

REACTIONS to last week's White Paper on Prices and Incomes Policy after June 30th, 1967 (Cmd 3235, H.M.S.O., price 1s net), have been unexpectedly favourable; that is, with the exception of the body which, in the last resort, it really concerns – the Trades Union Congress.

The main point that needs to be made is that the Government has, by all accounts, moved a considerable way from coercion to the voluntary principle. Herein lies both the strength and weakness of the new proposals.

Strictly speaking, it is a misnomer to describe the thinking which underlies the document as new. All that is new is the tardy recognition, stated explicitly in the White Paper, that "The success of the standstill and the period of severe restraint so far has been due largely to the voluntary acceptance by management and unions and by the public generally of the national need for restraint . . .".

The coercive statutory powers of Part II are to replace those of Part IV. No doubt they are, and will be, needed but the effectiveness of the Government's plans must stand or fall on their acceptance by industry, the public and the unions.

The White Paper goes some way to ensure such acceptance: the worst fears of industry have been removed; prices are not to be fixed; the criteria against which prices may be increased are reasonable and realistic. The latter will, one suspects, carry more weight with industry than the criteria for price reductions. In fact, however, these considerations are largely irrelevant as long as the current economic squeeze continues; competition in the market is likely to prove far more effective in restraining price increases than any White Paper criteria or even Part II.

The stock-markets have greeted the policy for dividends with unalloyed satisfaction, although this could well be tempered by further taxation in the near future if the 'moderation' for which the White Paper calls, is not exercised in accordance with the Government's wishes. But, again, the problem is unlikely to arise in the near future since the worst effects of the post-July recession on industrial profits have yet to be seen.

It is in respect of salaries and wages that the main problems arise. The 'freeze' on salaries has, to the satisfaction of industry, been removed and managements 'will be able to return to progressions based on added experience, increased responsibility or special effort', to which is added the injunction that 'in the interests of economic efficiency there should be a proper development of salary structures which provide incentives to improved performance'. The point here is that it offers the basis for widening differentials and more discriminatory increases in place of the uniform increases so prevalent in the past.

The critical reactions from T.U.C. spokesmen are understandable, not least the comment that the White Paper proposals are 'unfair'. There is nothing in the Paper which offers the rank and file trade unionist any real hope. The 'norm' for the next twelve months is 'nil', and the White Paper abjures employers to note that 'less regard should be paid to such factors as general comparisons with incomes in other employments and changes in the cost of living'. The keyword here is 'less'; the White Paper does not go so far as the National Incomes Board which openly declared that no consideration whatever should be given to such factors.

What are the prospects for this policy – as far as wages and the salaries of the lower grades of white-collar employee are concerned? The answer to this question would seem to lie in the degree of willingness of employers to meet demands for increases, which in turn must depend on the state of the labour market. This, it need hardly be added, depends on the Government's post-Budget economic policy. As long as the current recession continues, and with it the present level of unemployment, then the pressure on wage levels will not be so great that the 'nil' norm will be greatly exceeded.

If, however, the forthcoming Budget initiates a new phase of industrial expansion, then a fresh demand for labour cannot but result in wage increases over a wide field. Furthermore, prospects for the Government's plans must undoubtedly be adversely affected by the agreement implicit in the White Paper that wage awards which have been held up by the 'freeze' and standstill may soon be paid.

Inevitably – and particularly in those industries which employ workers from several different unions – the fact that one group receives an increase will evoke immediate demands from the less-favoured. This seems to be an untenable position in the long run, although in the shorter period – provided both Government and employers are prepared to withstand recurrent industrial action by dissatisfied groups of workers – it may be possible to carry through the proposed policy. But we shall not need to wait many months for an answer. The White Paper is still only a substitute for a longer-term policy which must be devised before many more months elapse.

Current Affairs

Estate Duty Relief on Growing Crops

UNDER section 23 of the Finance Act 1925 and section 28 (1) of the Finance Act 1949, the scale of rates of estate duty chargeable on the agricultural value of 'agricultural property', as defined in section 22 (1) (g) of the Finance Act 1894, is the same scale as applies in other cases with a reduction of 45 per cent in each of the rates. It has for some time been the Revenue's view that this relief is applicable to crops growing on agricultural land where the crop-owner owned the freehold of the land but not where he was only a leaseholder or tenant of it.

As the result of legal advice which they have recently received, the Board of Inland Revenue has directed that, with effect from December 6th, 1966, the benefit of the relief is to be given in respect of crops which are dutiable on death where the crop-owner was a tenant of the land on which they were growing, and not only where he was the freeholder.

The Revenue state that having regard to section 35 of the Finance Act 1951 (which restricts the re-opening of cases on the ground of legal mistake where duty has been paid and its payment and acceptance were regarded as satisfying the claim for duty on a view of the law which at the time was generally received or adopted in practice), the benefit of the new practice cannot be accorded to any case where the duty has been settled and paid before December 6th, 1966.

Accountants in Industry

IT is by now platitudinous to assert that the modern accountant is no longer concerned with recording only the past, but with assessing the future. The provision of management information is a top priority with any modern accounts department but, if an article in the March issue of Business Management is any guide, the shortage of qualified staff in many accounts departments is going to make it increasingly difficult to meet the needs of modern management. A survey among a sample of companies subscribing to the above journal reveals that whereas companies with over five hundred employees have an average accounting strength of twenty-one, the ratio of qualified men is only one in seven. For companies with between 100-500 employees the ratio is one in six, as it is for those with less than one hundred employees.

Even these figures seem to give a more favourable impression than the actual facts warrant. In the 'group of medium-sized companies there is on average exactly one qualified man to each company'; often he is either the chief accountant or the company secretary. In many of the smaller companies, states the article, the 'qualified man goes straight into a line management job', where he is 'fully occupied with the problem of producing routine results with poorly skilled staff'. This situation, in the opinion of a leading firm specializing in accountancy appointments, is likely to get much worse, since 'few young accountants are attracted by line management positions; they prefer more specialized work in preparing management information'.

In the circumstances, comments the article, since there is no hope that the supply of qualified men will increase sufficiently fast to match the rapidly growing demand, it is not surprising that accountancy salaries 'have been rising rapidly'. The very large companies are leading the field in this respect, and the smaller companies are lagging well behind in the scale of salaries paid. Likewise, in the field of accounts mechanization, the companies with over five hundred employees have a considerable lead. Among them, seven in ten have a data processing department which reports to the chief accountant. For the 100 to 500 group the proportion is only one in six. A similar figure emerges from an analysis of the value of equipment used for accounting routines. The smaller companies seem anxious to close the gap in this respect, but finance is a problem. On the other hand, it is worth remembering that while 'the computer may be the symbol of good accounting techniques, it is no guarantee of them'.

Aberdeen Chartered Accountants' Centenary Celebrations

ONE HUNDRED eventful years have passed since the formation of The Society of Accountants in Aberdeen and to mark the centenary, celebrations were held in Aberdeen on Monday and Tuesday of last week by The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland.

At a dinner held on Monday evening, presided over by the President of the Scottish Institute, Mr E. Birnie Reid, O.B.E., T.D., D.L., C.A., there were speeches by Professor G. M. Burnett, B.Sc., Ph.D., D.Sc., F.R.S.E., F.R.I.C., Vice-Principal, University of Aberdeen; Sheriff J. Aikman Smith, B.A., LL.B., and the President.

On the same evening, a ladies dinner was held at which the guest speaker was Dr W. Douglas Simpson, C.B.E., M.A., D.LITT., LL.D.

The following morning, a meeting was held in the Assembly Hall of Aberdeen Technical College with Mr J. G. W. Davidson, C.A., Convenor of the Institute's Aberdeen Local Committee, in the chair. The opening address was given by the President of the Institute who was followed by Mr A. S. Finnie, M.A., C.A., who spoke on 'The history of The Society of Accountants in Aberdeen'. Addresses were also given by Mr A. Keith, M.A., on 'The development of the City of Aberdeen', and Mr Frank G. Thomson, C.A., on 'Highland development'.

The meeting was followed by a number of social functions which included a civic reception attended by the Lord Provost, Magistrates and Town Council of Aberdeen, an informal luncheon, and in the evening, a Ball in the Elphinstone Hall, King's College.

At the time of its formation in 1867 there were twelve members of the Society practising accountancy in the City. In the early years, membership was, in fact, confined to those in public practice and it was not until 1890, when the then City Chamberlain was admitted, that a wider perspective was adopted.

At the turn of the century there were still only thirty-eight members, of whom twenty-eight were in Aberdeen. The pattern changed radically, however, during the following fifty years, for although numbers remained small – at the time of the absorption of the Society into the Scottish Institute in 1951 there were some 250 members – their distribution had completely changed. Only about a quarter of the members were in Aberdeen – there were actually more of them in the London area – and over 20 per cent (including the one and only lady member) were scattered throughout the countries of the Commonwealth and elsewhere.

The centenary celebrations were attended by over two hundred members and guests and their ladies.

The Modern Economy

NOT every economist who listened to the recent Reith lectures delivered by Prof. J. K. Galbraith was convinced by his thesis that a State-dominated economy was both inevitable and desirable. By far the strongest attack on Prof. Galbraith's views has come from the Head of the Department of Political Economy in University College, London. In an Occasional Paper entitled Economic Fact and Fantasy<sup>1</sup>, Prof. G. C. Allen takes Galbraith to task for his assumption that the small firm has no future and is merely a relic of the past. For many specialist products only the small firm is suitable and, after all, small firms sometimes grow into big ones.

Nor is Prof. Allen a believer in the thesis that size is synonymous with efficiency or with innovation, or that the managements of our major undertakings, not least in the nationalized sector of the economy, are invariably imbued with the pioneering spirit. Even where the large company is dynamic and progressive, that characteristic can usually be traced to one or two top men, rather than attributed to its size.

Prof. Allen has little sympathy with his American colleague's views on advertising which he regards as perverse. He is especially sceptical of the assertion that the modern company possesses irresistible powers of persuasion over the consumer market. In practice, argues Prof. Allen, such powers can be exercised only within limits and he cites the obvious cases of the furniture and textiles industries as illustrations of consumer 'sovereignty', to say nothing of the entertainment and tourist industries as cases where the consumer has not been 'content passively to accept what producers have preferred to give him'.

Earlier Investment Grants

THE President of the Board of Trade stated in the House of Commons on Tuesday of last week that payment of investment grants will begin on April 1st, three months earlier than expected. The President said that when he announced on December 1st the Government's decision to make a temporary increase in the rate of investment grants payable by the Board of Trade under Part I of the Industrial Development Act 1966, he indicated his intention to speed up the payment of claims as soon as practicable. As claims on investment made in 1966 have so far not come in at the rate allowed for, the Grants Offices are in a position to cope with payments earlier. By beginning payment in April instead of July, the average interval between a firm's expenditure and payment of grant will be reduced from eighteen months to fifteen months. Under the old system of investment allowances the delay between a firm's expenditure and the receipt of the allowance averaged about eighteen months.

The standard long-term rate of grant is 20 per cent, and the development area rate 40 per cent. But the President of the Board of Trade announced on December 1st that for expenditure incurred in 1967 and 1968, the rates are temporarily increased to 25 and 45 per cent.

The five Board of Trade Investment Grants Offices, in Glasgow, Billingham, Crosby, Cardiff and Southend opened in January for the receipt of applications in respect of the first quarter of 1966, and it was announced on March 6th that from April 1st they will be ready to receive applications for expenditure in the second quarter of 1966.

Polytechnic's New Business School

A FEATURE of the new building for the Polytechnic School of Management Studies opened last week by Sir Harry Pilkington, is a Business

Simulation Suite claimed to be unique in Britain. The suite comprises a set of rooms specially designed to enable students to work under realistically simulated business conditions in four areas under a teacher who will watch and direct from a central control point equipped with closed-circuit television. This equipment, complete with audio-visual recording facilities, as well as making it possible for students to work under observation without outside distractions, will also enable them 'to see themselves as others saw them' at the close of each session.

Apart from the business simulation suite, the new premises in Wells Street, London W1, have been designed as the most up-to-date business school in Britain. Besides the latest in teaching equipment, there is a computer room, residential accommodation for students and teachers, catering facilities, laboratories and a library.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

FOR many years past we've had an insurance policy covering personal accident to life or limb suffered by employees travelling on company business away from our premises. Fortunately, the risk margin is minimal, our only claimant up to last month being the office manager. After visiting a display of electronic accounting machines in London he wandered sight-seeing in the evening and arrived in Trafalgar Square in time to be involved in some demonstration in which he was jostled and kicked. He was quite annoyed when he learnt that he'd have to lose a limb to be eligible for compensation.

However, the law of statistical probabilities intervened at length. Last week poor George, our novelties buyer, was killed in a traffic accident outside a toy exhibition on the Continent.

The directors assembled in some gloom to discuss the personal problem. There was a widow with three youngish children. There was a pension and a house and an overdraft too big for comfort. There was also our P.A. policy providing a lump sum of three times his annual salary.

These lump sums, it is not always appreciated, are payable to the company rather than to the individual – an arrangement largely based on a legitimate endeavour to minimize estate duty for the widow. It was understood, however, that while the transfer of the money to her was technically at the discretion of the directors, still this was merely a legal formality entailing only a nominal delay.

So, indeed, it proved. The chairman said that she was a dashed pretty little bundle and, for his part, she was welcome to the money which he hoped would help her over the bereavement, poor little thing. The deputy chairman said grumpily that the money was more than she could ever have expected or, indeed, had been accustomed to handling, and he then paused as if to see would anybody else suggest that we should cut down the gift. Nobody did, so he agreed to implement the prompt payment.

Prinny remarked that he thought there might be problems ahead. She was an impulsive, emotional type of girl who might possibly go through the money quite improvidently – silly investments, you know, perhaps getting involved with some plausible Don Juan who'd skip with her nest egg. Still, there seemed to be no alternative.

I suggested that we might pay out half the amount to her at once and buy an annuity with the balance, or perhaps invest it on her behalf. The deputy chairman objected that this was paternalism. After all, we didn't have to spoon-feed these dependants; they had to stand on their own feet. Prinny observed that a widow had the moral right to run her own life; we mustn't arrogate to ourselves a claim to dominate her judgement; no benevolent despotism nowadays.

My worry derived from a feeling of responsibility for George's children. The widow was somewhat scatty, to be honest, a bit of a featherbrain, though, of course, she had her human freedom to seek her happiness on her own terms. All the same, she hadn't the freedom to leave the children destitute if she blundered. Perhaps a trust fund on their behalf, to carry them till they were capable of earning, would be acceptable . . . ?

The deputy chairman said that would lead to endless complications. Prinny rejected the implication that outsiders had any right to override the mother in controlling the children's destinies. She was their natural guardian; we mustn't assume dereliction of character in her future, or unerring wisdom in ours. The deputy chairman said that should the worst come to the worst the Welfare State would look after them, and the chairman asked what I thought we were paying these appalling taxes for?

So we gave her the money with appropriate words of sympathy. I hope that their philosophy is more accurate than my instinct.

Tax Responsibilities of Trustees

by H. S. A. MACNAIR, F.C.A.

FOR the purposes of capital gains tax the term 'settled property' is used to mean, in general, any property held in trust other than that comprised in unit trust schemes which are assimilated, with variations, to companies, the latter being not chargeable to corporation tax on profits accruing to them in a fiduciary or representative capacity except as respects any beneficial interest of their own in those profits.

It will be helpful to refer to P. H. Pettit's adaptation (Equity and the Law of Trusts, page 13) of Underhill's definition, to the effect that a trust is an equitable obligation binding a person ('the trustee') to deal with property over which he has control ('the trust property') either for the benefit of persons (the 'beneficiaries' or 'cestuis que trust') – of whom the trustee may himself be one – any of whom may enforce the obligation; or for a charitable purpose enforceable at the instance of the Attorney-General; or for some other purpose permitted by law though unenforceable.

However, in the context of section 42 of the Finance Act 1965 which relates to what may be termed 'vulnerable overseas trusts' an extended meaning is given to 'settled property' since a settlement is there taken to include any disposition, trust, covenant, agreement or arrangement, while a 'settlor' in that context includes not only one who directly or indirectly effected the settlement but also one providing funds therefor or in a reciprocal arrangement with the more immediate settlor.

Body of trustees

For gains tax purposes (short- and long-term) the trustees of a settlement are to be treated as being a single and continuing body distinct from the persons who may from time to time be the trustees. Such a body is normally to be treated as resident and ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom for gains tax purposes but that status is lost if the general administration of the trusts is ordinarily carried on abroad and if a majority of the trustees are not resident or not ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom for the time being.

In relation to non-corporate short-term gains (Case

VII of Schedule D) non-resident status is, however, accorded to a trustee, being a person acting in that capacity in the course of a business which consists of or includes the management of trusts, in relation to any such trust if the whole of the settled property consists of or derives from property provided by a person not domiciled, resident or ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom at the time of his death (if the trust arises thereout) or at the current time.

It may be noted that as regards land it is usual for a trust to be constituted by a conveyance to trustees on trust for sale with power of postponement so that the subject-matter of the trust is represented by the (notional) proceeds of sale rather than by land itself. An acceptable alternative is for the legal title to the settled land (within the meaning of the Settled Land Act 1925) to be vested in the tenant for life as trustee for the beneficiaries, including himself. Where this is so, one might expect to find a distinct set of persons entrusted with the remaining part of the property comprised in the settlement although both sets are to rank for gains tax purposes as complementary elements representing a unified body of trustees.

Personal representatives

Similarly, in relation to property forming part of the estate of a deceased, the 'personal representatives' are for gains tax purposes to be treated as one body but its residence, ordinary residence and domicile are determined by those of the deceased at the date of death. The term 'personal representatives' includes those within the definition in section 55 of the Administration of Estates Act 1925 relating to England and Wales, and also persons having similar functions under the law of another country. In consequence the 'first £5,000 exemption' on death (see below) is apportionable between distinct sets of personal representatives according to the respective values of the property devolving on them.

As regards income tax and gains tax chargeable on a deceased estate, the executor or administrator is made liable – although with right of recourse to the assets and effects of the estate – and may be proceeded against. A similar rule applies to the parent, guardian or tutor of an infant. Furthermore, the criteria for designating a 'vulnerable overseas trust' contain elements derived from the foregoing. Thus it is required as regards the settlor (or one of them) that he should be 'shorebound', an expression coined here to mean domiciled in the United Kingdom (either when the settlement was made or when the gains were realized) and resident or ordinarily resident there. The trustees, however, would be neither resident nor ordinarily resident.

'Bare' trustees

In relation to assets held by a person as nominee for another person, or as trustee for another person absolutely entitled as against the trustee, the existence of the intermediary is wholly disregarded for gains tax purposes. This ruling may be thought to echo the attitude towards 'bare' trustees of the Court of Appeal in J. Bibby & Sons Ltd v. C.I.R. (29 T.C. 167), although the question as to who are 'bare' trustees does not seem to have been entirely resolved (see the comments on page 601 of Dymond's Death Duties, fourteenth edition).

As reviewed in P. H. Pettit's work (see above) the position of a 'bare' trustee seems to connote an absence of active duties and the obligation to convey the subject-matter of the trust on being directed to do so by beneficiaries competent in law to act. However, the gains tax legislation extends this concept in various directions, notably as regards those infants whose inability to give a valid discharge is the sole obstacle to full rights, and other persons under disability.

This contrasts with the income tax position under section 363 of the Income Tax Act 1952 whereby the trustee, guardian, curator or committee of any incapacitated person (any infant, person of unsound mind, lunatic, idiot or insane person) having the direction, control or management of the property is made fully responsible as regards matters under his control, whether or not the person represented is resident.

Receiver

For gains tax the 'bare trustee' status is also accorded to a person entitled to an asset by way of security, or entitled to the benefit of a charge or incumbrance on an asset, with an extension to receivers, managers or judicial factors. As regards income tax a receiver appointed by a United Kingdom Court takes over responsibility in relation to property entrusted to him thereby. On the other hand, section 367 limits to evidential matters the income tax responsibilities of a trustee who has authorized the direct receipt of profits arising from trust property on the part of the person entitled thereto.

Some general guidance as to the position of a receiver in the context of income tax is available from the case of Hosemaster Machine Co Ltd v. Lawson ([1966] T.R. 157). Another instance of a 'bare' trustee for gains tax purposes is that of a person acting as trustee or assignee in bankruptcy or under a deed of arrangement, that is, one governed by the Deeds of Arrangement Act 1914 or any corresponding legislation in Scotland or Northern Ireland.

One may notice here the obligation imposed by section 7 of the Income Tax Management Act 1964 on any person to deliver a return of income which is not his income, but in respect of which he is chargeable in any capacity specified in the notice. This includes particulars of any assets acquired on behalf of the person represented, subject only to the exclusion of items under £1,000 which are tangible movable property (an expression which in this context does not extend to currency of any description or commodities dealt on a terminal market), assets acquired as trading stock, and the exempt categories indicated in section 27 of the Finance Act 1965 (private vehicles or currency, certain Government issues, gaming wins, personal damages and awards). Moreover any person in whose name shares of a company are registered may be required to give particulars of the beneficial owner for whom he is nominee.

Similarly the duty to respond to a notice calling for particulars relevant to a vulnerable overseas trust is one imposed on any person interested in property under a settlement, the trustees of which are not resident or ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom. This may also be the appropriate place to mention the rule which requires occasional returns (if demanded) from every person who, in whatever capacity, is in receipt of any money or value or assessable income of or belonging to any other person who either is chargeable or would be so if not incapacitated or non-resident.

Death

Perhaps the demise of an individual represents the most common occasion on which trustees' responsibilities are brought into being, and for capital gains tax (but not Case VII) all the assets of which the deceased was competent to dispose pass at their market value to the personal representatives or other person on whom they devolve. In this connection the computation of the deceased's notional gain or loss is to include the subsequent incidental costs of the transfer to the personal representatives. Apparently they would comprise professional fees and the costs of transfer or conveyance, including stamp duty, together with costs reasonably incurred in making any valuation or apportionment required for the purposes of the capital gains computation, in particular in ascertaining market value at death.

It is perhaps a moot point as to whether legal expenses such as those falling on the unsuccessful litigants in Duke of Devonshire's Trustees v. C.I.R. ([1965] T.R. 263) would rank as having been 'reasonably' incurred. A similar right of deduction may be claimed in relation to the actual disposition by the personal representatives of the deceased's assets, whether by way of sale or by disposition to legatees.

As regards Scottish entailed estate (see chapter VII of Dymond's Death Duties), the estate duty rules are reflected in section 24 (10) of the Finance Act 1965. More generally, the expression 'competent to dispose' (see chapter IV of Dymond's) is related to notional testamentary capacity and the influence of Westminster is seen in the application of the rules of English law on the basis of notional domicile and situation of the assets in England.

However, the dispositions competent in right of a power of appointment or of the testamentary capacity conferred by statute to dispose of entailed interests are not within the meaning of the phrase. On the other hand if not more than two years after a death any of the dispositions of the deceased estate are varied by a deed of family arrangement or similar instrument the latter is to be identified in all respects with the original dispositions so that no further occasion of charge arises thereby.

Where assets are held by a trustee or assignee in bankruptcy or under a deed of arrangement there is a notional devolution on death, the assets being held thereafter in the capacity of (auxiliary) personal representative, together with any after acquired assets. The computations to be made of the deceased's chargeable gains, after including gains and losses on deathbed gifts (donatio mortis causa) and deducting the 'first £5,000 exemption', so far as relevant, are to be aggregated with those applicable to the first part of the year of assessment in which death occurred. Should the resulting computation for that year show a loss, it may be relieved against gains of one, two or three of the immediately preceding years. The personal representatives in turn have a right of relief for the three initial years' losses, retrospective to an extra period, that of the year of decease.

Exemptions

The 'first £5,000 exemption' is liable to be attenuated or extinguished if it has been anticipated under section 34 of the Finance Act 1965, which provides for retirement relief up to £5,000 with the opportunity to accelerate the 'first £5,000 exemption' otherwise available at death. If, on the other hand, the latter is not fully taken up against the deceased's estate, it is to be available to the trustees of settled property vesting on the death or deemed to pass on the termination of a life interest, or otherwise, including a subsequent termination of which the incidence is deferred by the 'fifteen-year' rule (see below).

The computation of gains, less losses, in respect of such settled property is to be made in the usual way but where more than one body of trustees is concerned then the available relief is to be apportioned in proportion to the respective values of the settled property. The relief thus spread around is also a factor in the computation of the amount of capital gains tax eligible for deferred payment (see below).

Another instance of extension of an exemption is that available where during the period of ownership of the trustee a dwelling-house has been the only or main residence of a person entitled to occupy it under the terms of the settlement, in which event any notice of choice has to be given to the Inspector jointly by the trustee and the occupier.

Works of art

More generally, various exemptions accorded to the ownership of certain classes of asset under estate duty are extended to capital gains tax chargeable on death or on the occasion of a gift. One such class is governed by section 15 (2) of the Finance Act 1894 relating to any pictures, prints, books, manuscripts, works of art or scientific collections which appear to the Treasury to be of national, scientific or historic interest. Under that Act the gifting of the items to approved public purposes was requisite but the exemption was extended to the case where a sale was made to approved institutions by section 40 of the Finance Act 1930, which also exempted mere retention until such sale. However, the latter privilege was modified by section 48 of the Finance Act 1950 whereby the custodian was required to undertake certain obligations regulating the conservation of the objects.

In this connection an extension of the gains tax concession is possible in relation to the subject-matter comprised in gifts, settlements, termination of life interests and ultimate vesting provided that the required undertaking, under which the exempted objects must remain in the United Kingdom and reasonable steps taken for their preservation, is given by such person as the Treasury thinks appropriate in the circumstances of the case. Breach of the undertaking involves the vendor or neglectful owner in an immediate liability by reference to market value.

However, it is possible for ownership to be alienated without penalty where objects are applied in satisfaction of death duties (section 34 (1), Finance Act 1956), although the Treasury have to be satisfied that the work of art in question is pre-eminent for its aesthetic merit or historical value. Effect is given to the foregoing concessions through the usual device whereby the items in question are assumed to change hands for such amount as would involve the disponent in neither gain nor loss.

It would seem that this requirement would in some instances be likely to involve the parties in the expenses of valuations and research of no ultimate utility in the computation of gains tax. As regards land gifted, immediately or subject to life interests, to the National Trust or other qualifying purpose, the exemptions for capital gains tax follow those for estate duty.

Vulnerable overseas trusts

With regard to 'vulnerable overseas trusts' as referred to above, the target of attack is the 'shorebound' beneficiary to whom is ascribed a chargeable gain which may here be designated as his 'quota'.

The 'shorebound' beneficiary is a person domiciled and either resident or ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom during any given year of assessment. The 'quota' is to be computed as if the trustees were 'shorebound' and that proportion of their consequential chargeable gains were to be apportioned between persons having interests in the settled property, whether the interest be a life interest or an interest in reversion. It seems to be generally accepted that losses incurred by the trustees are deductible in computing gains for 'quota' purposes, despite the distinctive terms of sections 22 (10) and 23 (7) of the Finance Act 1965, but there can be no question of computing a negative 'quota'.

The interests referred to above are deemed to include an interest in a value equivalent to that of an annuity of yearly amount representing one-third of three years antecedent income benefits, being discretionary payments received by anyone out of trust income in any of the three years ending with that in which a chargeable gain accrues. Moreover the task of apportionment, in computing the 'quota', is to be made both in such manner as is just and reasonable and, as near as may be, according to the respective values of the interests, disregarding the possibility of defeasance in the case of a defeasible interest. This rather inelegant phrase is more simply expressed in the Board of Inland Revenue Notes which refer to the possibility that an interest may become valueless on the happening of a contingency. Perhaps a common instance is that of an infant whose vested interest might be defeated by section 31 (2) of the Trustee Act 1925. However, it has been noted (T. J. Sophian in The Taxation of Capital Gains) that a parallel problem arises under section 33 (3) of the Finance Act 1954 and those interested may wish to refer to the commentary on page 542 of Dymond's Death Duties.

Position after gain has arisen

The position after a gain has arisen to the trustees of a vulnerable overseas trust also requires consideration. If they then exercise their discretion so that a capital payment representing the gain to some extent is made to a 'shorebound' beneficiary, that element of gain comes home to roost with him as a 'quota' except in so far as it has already been attributed to another 'shorebound' beneficiary under these various rules. However, the rules as to 'quota' are subject to a general limitation in favour of a beneficiary, interested solely in the income of a settlement made before April 6th, 1965, who cannot anticipate by means of the exercise of any power of appointment or power of revocation or otherwise obtain for himself, whether with or without the consent of any other person, any part of the capital represented by the settled property.

Further, as regards the 'quota' apportioned to an interest in reversion in any part of the capital represented by property settled before April 6th, 1965, the tax thereon may be postponed until the beneficiary either becomes absolutely entitled or disposes of his interest, again assuming that he cannot 'anticipate' as above. In this context any property added to a settlement after April 5th, 1965 (or otherwise) is regarded as representing a separate settlement. A small mercy is that where payment of capital gains tax attributable to a 'quota' is volunteered by the trustees, their bounty is not to represent a further occasion for designating a 'quota' or indeed any other form of taxation.

Occasions of charge

A gift in settlement, whether revocable or irrevocable, is a disposal of the entire property thereby becoming settled property, notwithstanding that the donor has some interest as a beneficiary under the settlement or that he is the sole or any trustee. Moreover, in accordance with section 22 (4) of the Finance Act 1965, the trustees acquire that settled property at market value, that is, the price which the assets comprised in the settlement might reasonably be expected to fetch on a sale in the open market. It should be noted that in estimating market value no reduction is to be made for the fact of a block of items being placed on the market all at once, although the depreciating effect of an individual's decease may be recognized.

Again, a notional disposal and re-acquisition is prescribed on the occasion of the termination after April 6th, 1965, of a life interest in possession in all or part of the settled property, other than that which vests absolutely (and is the subject of separate rules). The rule is extended (paragraph 1 (2) of Schedule 10, Finance Act 1966), to the case where the person entitled to such an interest dies after May 3rd, 1966.

It may be asked: what is a life interest in possession? The precise significance of the last three words in the context of the Finance Acts appears to be a somewhat vexed question which has received judicial attention in the context of section 43 (1) of the Finance Act 1940. Perhaps it will be sufficient to refer to the review of authorities by Mr Justice Ungood-Thomas in re Gartside's Will Trusts ([1966] T.R. 205), and to the discussion in Dymond's Death Duties (page 185 of the fourteenth edition), although it should be observed that the comments in the first supplement to Dymond's are amplified by the dicta in re Holmden's Settlement ([1966] T.R. 139) of the Court of Appeal, which gave leave for that matter to be taken to the House of Lords.

Scope of a life interest

At any rate the legislation clarifies the position to some extent by declaring that a life interest for capital gains tax does not include any right which is contingent on the exercise of the discretion of the trustee or some other person, nor does it include an annuity, notwithstanding that it may be payable out of or charged on the income or capital of the trust. On the other hand, the 1966 Act arranged for 'appropriated' funds to be treated as if representing a separate settlement for the duration of the annuity, including the death of the annuitant, and for this purpose the annuitant's interest ranks as a 'life interest'.

'Appropriation' exists where an annuity fund is set up by the trustees out of settled property to the capital and income of which recourse is thereafter denied.

A further development with effect from May 5th, 1966, is that a 'life interest' does include a right under the settlement to the income of the settled property, or its use and occupation, for the life of another person or for more than one life. For periods before May 5th, 1966, a slightly different rule was contained in paragraph 25 (10) (a) of the Finance Act 1965.

Another modification is that no notional disposal is to be deemed on the occasion of the termination of the trusts of the settlement as respects any part of the settled property by the exercise of a power for that purpose contained in the settlement. Alternatively, it may be a statutory power of advancement which is exercised or there may be for that purpose the surrender of a life interest, although to qualify in the latter context all the property concerned must pass out of the settlement.

Nevertheless no chargeable gain is to accrue on the disposal of an interest created by or arising under a settlement, including in particular an annuity or life interest and the reversion thereto, by that person for whose benefit the interest in question was created by the terms of the settlement with an extension to any other person whose title is not dependent on the provision of money or money's worth unless such provision stems from another interest under the settlement (paragraph 13, Schedule 7, Finance Act 1965). The maturity of the interest is, however, in all cases the occasion for measuring the retiring holder's gain or loss.

Collection arrangements

The collection of tax in respect of chargeable gains is a matter of practical concern. The general rules are set out in Schedule 10 to the Finance Act 1965, and paragraph 12 spells out certain obvious applications to trustees. However, a special rule permits the tax to be paid by sixteen half-yearly (or eight annual) instalments where it arises on death or other notional occasions of disposal as far as relating to interests in land, shares or securities of a company 'controlled' in the estate duty sense of section 55 of the Finance Act 1940 and also certain unquoted shares acceptable to the Revenue in this context. Such instalments, which carry interest, commence after twelve months and require to be paid up if there is an actual disposal.

The other side of the coin concerns the protection of the Treasury and, if assets are transferred to a beneficiary, the latter may be called upon to meet a liability arising in the trust period which has been outstanding over six months and is not yet more than two years overdue.

Fifteen-year rule

However, the expedition of tax collections also takes the form of a charge to tax at artificial intervals. The general rule for periodic notional disposals looks to a period of fifteen years throughout which there is no life interest in possession but this rule is not applied to property of which both capital and income are wholly or primarily applicable for educational, cultural or recreational purposes and the only persons benefiting are members of an association of persons for whose benefit the property was settled, not being persons of whom the greater number are 'connected' persons. The significance of the term 'connected' is discussed in paragraph 21 of Schedule 7 to the Finance Act 1965 but it may be sufficient to note here that a person in his capacity as trustee of a settlement is connected with any individual who in relation to it is a settlor, in addition to the more obvious relationships with brother or sister, spouse, ancestor or lineal descendant. It may also be relevant to refer to the Recreational Charities Act 1958 although the subject of charities generally is outside the scope of this article.

A point to note is that if there is a life interest (in income) in a part of the settled property without right of recourse to the remainder, that part is to be treated in this context as being settled property under a separate settlement. A transitional problem arises in relation to the incidence of the fifteen-year interval rule on settlements subsisting on April 6th, 1965. For settlements created not later than April 5th, 1950, the usual tests are applied although no liability materializes before April 7th, 1967, under a special rule. As regards earlier settlements, however, it is unnecessary to trace their previous history since they are treated as 'created' on the first day after April 5th, 1950, which marks the passing of the fifteenth, thirtieth or other multiple of fifteen years from the actual date of creation.

Ultimate vesting

On the occasion when ultimately a person becomes absolutely entitled to any settled property as against the trustee, the latter's status immediately changes to that of a 'bare' trustee with the consequence that there is yet one more disposal, in relation to which market value is prescribed as the measure to be applied.

Since it is not uncommon for the newly constituted 'bare' trustee to continue to act as such, it is opportune to draw attention here to the right accorded to some beneficiaries to recover income tax by reference to personal allowances not fully utilized during the minority, in so far as the assets vesting comprise income accumulated for the benefit of the claimant contingently on his or her attaining some specified age or marrying (section 228, Income Tax Act 1952). However, the procedures outlined above are by-passed in the case of a person acquiring any asset as legatee in which event he is regarded as taking direct from the deceased.

In all these circumstances the expenses of transfer to the person finally entitled is permitted to rank as acquisition expenditure unless already taken up in relation to the deceased's estate as previously indicated. Similarly the benefit of unutilized losses of trustees may be carried forward to the beneficiary obtaining the relevant assets.

Betterment Levy—III

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

IT was stated in the previous article that the chargeable act or event which gives rise to a Case C assessment is the carrying out of a project of material development begun on or after April 6th, 1967. It may be, however, that a project begun before April 6th, 1967, is not completed before this date because the development of land is not usually capable of such speedy completion as is the sale, or the grant of a tenancy, of land.

Under section 27 no levy is chargeable unless the development value, or part of the development value, of land is realized on or after April 6th, 1967, so that if the matter rested on section 27 and the attendant sections 31 and 32 alone, a material development begun before April 6th, 1967, would be exempt from levy even though not completed until later. But section 27 (1) contains the words 'subject to and in accordance with the following provisions of this Part of this Act', and it is necessary to have regard to section 67, which is one of the most complicated sections, or at least one of the most difficult to follow, in the Act. It will therefore be convenient to get this and one or two other sections out of the way before proceeding to consider how levy in Case C is to be computed.

Under section 64 a 'project of material development' means any project or scheme in pursuance of which any material development is, or is to be, carried out; and a 'project of material development of any land' means a project of material development which comprises that land, with or without other land. It was stated in the previous article (March 25th issue) that under section 64 (3) the carrying out of a project of material development will be taken to begin or have begun on the earliest date on which any 'specified operation' comprised in the project begins or began to be carried out. The expression 'specified operation' is one which recurs in the Act, so that it is necessary to keep its meaning in mind. It is defined in section 64 (4) and includes, inter alia, any work of construction in the course of erecting a building and even the digging of a trench to contain the foundations; but it is to be observed that the clearing of land by the demolition of obstructive buildings, trees or other obstacles is not a specified operation and does not constitute the beginning of development.

In the first article it was stated at page 337 that 'material development' is defined by section 99 (2) as meaning any development other than (a) development permitted under the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1963; (b) development which is notionally included within the concept of existing use value, and (c) development excluded from liability to levy under the Material Development (Exceptions) Regulations to be made by the Minister of Housing and Local Government and to come into operation on April 6th, 1967.

Since the first article was written these excepting regulations have been made and laid before Parliament. They exempt from levy a wide variety of development such as the rebuilding and conversion, within prescribed limits, of dwelling-houses, certain kinds of industrial development, operations under the Petroleum (Production) Act 1934, building operations requisite for outdoor physical recreation, operations carried out by electricity and gas undertakings, certain kinds of change of use and certain kinds of advertisement. The regulations also complete the exceptions given by virtue of section 99 (2) (a) and (b), so that development of the class permitted by the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1963 is generally excepted whether or not it complies with the conditions mentioned opposite to that class in column (2) in Schedule 1 to that Order.

If the excepting regulations are compared with the Minister's statement in Hansard, August 4th, 1966, as to what the regulations would prescribe as excluded from development, it will be seen that there are certain differences. For example, paragraph 7 (2) (d) of the regulations exempts from levy, subject to qualification, the extension or alteration of industrial buildings so long as the gross floor space of the original buildings is not exceeded by more than 5,000 square feet.

Section 67

Section 67 applies to any project of material development (in the section referred to as 'the larger project') where:

- (a) the carrying out of the project was begun before April 6th, 1967, but is not completed before that day;
- (b) one or more 'specified operations' comprised in the project (in the section referred to as 'the existing operations') began before April 6th, 1967, to be carried out on part of the land comprised in the project, but no 'specified operation' has before that date begun to be carried out on the 'remainder' of that land; and
- (c) the carrying out of the project on the remainder of that land is not authorized by any planning permission in force on April 6th, 1967, which authorized any of the 'existing operations' to be carried out.

Pausing here, it will be seen that if the developer has planning permission authorizing the development of the whole of a project of material development, then if he makes a start on the project by way of a 'specified operation' before April 6th, 1967, but fails to complete the project before that date, he will be wholly free of liability to pay levy. This is because, having planning permission authorizing the whole of his project of material development, he is not caught by section 67 (1) (c) which requires (for the section to bite) that there shall be some part of the project called the 'remainder' of the land on which the developer has not made a start, and on which the carrying out of the project is not authorized by a planning permission in force on April 6th, 1967, which itself authorizes the carrying out of a 'specified operation'.

Outline planning permission

But does the developer secure immunity from levy where the planning permission covering the whole of his project of material development is in outline form only under Article 5 (2) of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1963? An outline planning permission contains a condition to the effect that no development shall be carried out in pursuance of the outline permission unless and until detailed plans and specifications of the development have been first approved by the local planning authority. Therefore, a start cannot be made on the site except in breach of a condition of the outline planning permission. If the developer begins development on the 'larger project' before April 6th, 1967, but in respect of the remainder of the land does not have a planning permission which authorizes the carrying out of a 'specified operation' he will be caught by section 67 (1) (c). The 'larger project' will be begun before April 6th, 1967, but the development of the 'remainder' will be deemed to have begun after that date.

This position arises by reason of section 99 (3) which provides that wherever the Act speaks of development being authorized by planning permission, then, if the only planning permission available is an outline planning permission, the only development which may be regarded as 'authorized' within the meaning of the Act is either:

- (a) development which is or was authorized by that permission without any requirement as to subsequent approval, or
- (b) not being so authorized, has or had been approved in the manner applicable to that planning permission.

The question may therefore be asked how, under a bare outline planning permission for a project of material development which does not itself authorize the carrying out of development, and no part of which has been built up into a full planning permission, it is possible to make a start on development in breach of the outline planning permission. The answer is that it is not an offence to begin development without planning permission. An offence is committed if the developer carries on with the development after having been served with an enforcement notice which has later come into full force and effect and which prohibits the continuance of the development. But a local planning authority, instead of serving an enforcement notice in respect of development begun without full planning permission, may grant planning permission ex post facto, which they are expressly authorized to do by the Town and Country Planning Act 1962, section 20.

Full planning permission

Section 67 (2) provides that if the 'existing operations' or some of them, are authorized by one or more planning permissions in force on April 6th, 1967, then, for the purposes of Part III of the Act:

- (a) so much of the 'larger project' as relates to land comprised in that planning permission or those planning permissions, together with so much (if any) of that project as relates to any other land on which any of the 'existing operations' began to be carried out before April 6th, 1967, shall be taken to constitute a separate project of material development which began to be carried out before April 6th, 1967, and
- (b) the 'remainder' of the 'larger project' shall be taken to constitute one or more other separate projects of material development which did not begin to be carried out before April 6th, 1967.

Examples

1. In January 1967, a developer has outline planning permission to develop an estate by building on it 200 houses. Later, but before April 6th, 1967, he obtains approval of detailed plans and specifications for fifty of the houses. Also before April 6th, 1967, he carries out a 'specified operation' by digging a trench to contain the foundations for one of the fifty houses which are the subject of a full planning permission. He is free of levy not only in respect of the fifty houses for which his outline planning permission has been built up into a full planning permission, but also in respect of the remaining 150 houses comprised in the outline planning permission but not yet covered by full planning permission.

2. A building with fifty-five acres of land has outline planning permission for thirty acres and detailed approvals in respect of ten of them. If he starts work before April 6th, 1967, by laying out roads or digging foundations on the ten acres in accordance with the detailed approvals, the project started will be the development of the thirty acres, and the development of the remaining twenty-five acres will be a separate project started after April 6th, 1967.

3. A developer has outline planning permission to build houses on an estate of one hundred acres. Under the outline permission he may build part of his estate road layout without having to obtain further detailed approval for the road, but plans and specifications of all the houses remain to be approved. If he starts work on the road before April 6th, 1967, all the land escapes levy.

4. A developer has one hundred acres to develop as a housing estate and has full planning permission for the first five houses but no permission of any kind for the remainder. The digging of a trench for one of the houses will enable the five plots only on which they are to be built to escape levy.

No planning permission

Section 67 (3) provides that if none of the 'existing operations' is authorized by planning permission in force on April 6th, 1967, then:

- (a) so much of the 'larger project' as relates to land on which any of those operations began to be carried out before April 6th, 1967, shall be taken to constitute a separate project of material development which began to be carried out before April 6th, 1967, and
- (b) the 'remainder' of the 'larger project' shall be taken to constitute one or more other separate projects of material development which did not begin to be carried out before April 6th, 1967.

Examples

1. A developer has an estate of fifty acres to develop for housing but no planning permissions of any kind. Before April 6th, 1967, he digs part of a trench to take the foundations of one house. The completion of the house will constitute a separate project of material development and there will be no levy on the one building plot, but there will be levy to pay on all the other plots.

2. Drainage works have been carried out not only on sections of land A, B and C with planning permission, but have also been extended along section D for a distance of one hundred yards without planning permission. The development for one hundred yards along section D without permission will escape levy if planning permission is subsequently obtained, but the rest of section D will attract levy.

It will be seen, therefore, that section 67 can be quite tricky. There is also a further point to be borne in mind in connection with subsection (2). In Example 1 illustrating this subsection, the developer has outline planning permission for 200 houses but later obtains approval of detailed plans and specifications for fifty of the houses. Because he carries out a 'specified operation' to one of the fifty houses before April 6th, 1967, he is freed from levy on the site of the whole 200 houses. What he has done in respect of the fifty houses is to build up the outline planning permission in respect of those houses into a full planning permission, by applying for the local planning authority's approval of plans and specifications for the fifty houses in accordance with conditions set out in the earlier outline planning permission. If instead of doing this he had applied for full planning permission for the fifty houses he would, strictly, be freed of levy in respect of the fifty houses only, and not in respect of the remaining 150 houses which were subject to outline planning permission only.

This is a matter which has been taken up by the Law Society with the former Ministry of Land and Natural Resources (which has now ceased to exist in consequence of its functions having been taken over by the Ministry of Housing and Local Government). On February 13th, 1967, the Law Society were informed by the former Ministry that provided the second application is made within the ambit and scope of the outline planning permission, then the Land Commission will regard it as seeking approval of the details under the outline planning permission.

Project of material development

Section 65 (1) provides that in determining what is at any time comprised in a project of material development:

- (a) all the development (whether material development or not) which is to be, or has before that time been, carried out in pursuance of the project, and all operations in the course of the clearing of the land which are to be, or have before that time been, so carried out, shall be taken to be comprised in the project; and
- (b) all land which is to be, or has before that time been, developed or cleared in pursuance of the project (but no other land) shall be taken to be land comprised in the project.

It will be seen, therefore, that while the clearing of land of obstacles preparatory to development is not a 'specified operation' within section 64 (3), it is comprised in a 'project of material development' within section 65 (1).

One product

THE Typhoo Tea company is the one-product company par excellence. For some time past there has been annual comment by the chairman on the board's acknowledgement of the need for other interests but, equally, a report that no move has been made. The last report, from which this week's reprint comes, was no exception in this respect.

The penultimate paragraph in the statement by Mr H. C. Kelley, F.C.A., the chairman, reads: 'The Board have been conscious for some time of the need for diversification and during the past twelve months have explored several possibilities. After careful investigation these have not proved to be acceptable as suitable additions to the group, but as and when your directors feel that it is appropriate to go ahead with an acquisition, we shall be happy to inform our shareholders at the earliest opportunity.'

As the balance sheet shows, the group is not without the wherewithal to finance new acquisitions, although there is an interesting point in Mr Kelley's statement on the question of employment of cash resources. He points to the slight fall in investment income and explains that it was due to the fact that interest rates were less favourable than the discounts offered on purchase of teas which were in consequence taken. This reduced the sum available for investment and was a reversal of the previous year's position.

Promotion

The tea trade has been spending heavily on promotion and Mr Kelley puts the total expenditure in this national campaign at 'some £735,000'. His observations on this matter are interesting; he says: 'Results from generic campaigns of this nature are rather slow to gain momentum and I therefore feel that it would be unfair to comment at this stage; nevertheless, we believe that Ty-Phoo remains one of the leading brands in the country.'

Which, being interpreted, suggests that a national campaign by the trade, as such, must of itself engender parallel promotion by individual companies on the basis that a company must maintain its share of the market. The Typhoo company is not exactly backward in employing modern advertising and marketing techniques – as the frontispiece to the report reminds those shareholders who do not have television.

Looking at 1967, Mr Kelley is confident that the company 'will maintain its position as a leader in the tea industry', although the general trade outlook 'is not perhaps as encouraging as one would like and margins are already under pressure in many fields'. Meanwhile, guarding against the effects of the squeeze, the directors have thought it prudent to transfer £275,000 to a reserve for bad and doubtful debts.

Goodwill

One item conspicuously absent from the Typhoo balance sheet is 'Goodwill'. This vexed matter has recently been the subject of comment and discussion and since goodwill – in balance sheets at any rate – is to a degree a hypothetical matter, it seems worth while to ask a hypothetical question. What price would be put on the goodwill of the Typhoo business if a ready and willing buyer came on the scene?

The goodwill is of probably millions of housewives who stand by Ty-Phoo tea and the grocers, big and small, who stock it and even the publicists who promote it. Is this goodwill – and this is not necessarily a hypothetical question – one of the reasons why the directors are obviously wary of moving into diversification? The goodwill name of Ty-Phoo cannot surely be connected with any other product or company which cannot be relied upon to at least maintain that goodwill.

Obviously this item cannot be quantified in balance sheet terms. It must remain an unquantified, hidden and untouchable reserve. And that in real business terms is odd since goodwill must be the essence of the company's business. Once Typhoo as a company or Ty-Phoo as a product lost its goodwill, profits would immediately suffer.

Millions

COMPARE the absence of any goodwill item in the Typhoo accounts with a goodwill item of as much as £2,529,187 in the accounts of I.D.C. Ltd out of a balance sheet total of £3,309,873. I.D.C. Ltd is the holding company of the Industrial Development and Construction Group of civil and constructional engineering companies.

The accounts are the first to be issued since the company went public last March. The chairman explains the goodwill item to shareholders by saying that the board considered it appropriate, after obtaining professional advice, to record, by the opening of a share premium account, the difference between the nominal value of the ordinary shares issued in exchange for the shares of subsidiaries immediately prior to flotation and the actual value of the shares of the subsidiaries reflected in the price at which the ordinary shares were offered for sale.

'Such a course', the chairman adds, 'results in the share capital and consolidated reserves reflecting the profit-earning capacity of the group while involving the inclusion in the group balance sheet of an intangible item equivalent to goodwill.' A normal operation, maybe, but it will be interesting in the years ahead of I.D.C. Ltd as a public company to see how quickly the directors are prepared to get the goodwill item down.

CITY NOTES

THE Government's White Paper on restraint after the freeze initially sent the stock-market into a whirl of activity at the ending of the all-out dividend freeze. Second thoughts on the subject inevitably brought more mature consideration, first on the point that clearly the Government will be keeping a strict watch on dividends and secondly on the possibility that dividend freedom, even to a moderate degree, might go hand in hand with a rise in corporation tax.

If higher wages are going to have to be earned by increased output through higher productivity then it is not beyond the bounds of probability that higher dividends will have to be harder earned as well. And one way to make dividends harder earned is to increase taxation of company profits. This, admittedly, is conjecture, but it is the kind of conjecture on which the second thoughts on dividend freedom are presently turning.

But temporarily, at least, the White Paper gave the equity market a fillip – a rise of 1s in I.C.I. shares, where last year's dividend was not fully covered, was evidence enough of that, for I.C.I. may be hard pressed adequately to cover a maintained dividend this year let alone raise the rate.

THE subject of boardroom statements on bid rumours, mentioned in this column a week ago, is now a matter of considerable consequence in the stock-market. Reports of merger negotiations between United Drapery Stores and Montague Burton were met by vehement denials from the latter and stoney silence from the former. But neither the one nor the other made any impact. Once the stock-market gets the rumour bit between its teeth no amount of reining through denials or silence, comment or 'no comment', has much effect.

Another case in point concerns the Murex company whose directors issued an extremely strong denial of take-over rumours without budging the market from its impression that a bid may be made.

SIR HARRY DOUGLASS, chairman of the T.U.C., makes a fair point on equity dividends in an article in last week's issue of The Stock Exchange Journal. He points out that very often in bad times of lower profits and, possibly, labour redundancy, companies maintain dividends, even by drawing on reserves. The equity risk in the opinion of some people should be seen to be a risk. If ordinary capital is the risk capital of a company should there, in fact, be a dividend reserve, or the use of any other reserve for that matter, to protect ordinary shareholders from that risk? The debate is not new, admittedly, but it has a new angle in current conditions.

THE decision of Westminster and Barclays banks to give a trial run to cash dispensing machines so as to provide a twenty-four hours a day, 363 days a year service will undoubtedly be watched closely by other leading banks. If it is successful the others will almost certainly follow.

The system is for a special voucher, presumably something like a 'Barclaycard', to be inserted into the machine to dispense £10 of cash. The voucher works the machinery and records the account number, and the record duly gets back to the customer's branch.

Initially to be introduced at special branches in selected areas, the scheme obviously has potential for operation at airports, railway stations and hotels.

The Finance Acts 1965 and 1966

The memoranda submitted by the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales to the Board of Inland Revenue setting out some anomalies and practical difficulties arising out of the Finance Act 1965 and comments on the Finance Bill 1966 have been the subject of discussions between representatives of the Council and of the Board. The following summary of certain matters discussed may be of assistance to members and others. (The memoranda were published in The Accountant of May 21st, and July 23rd, 1966.)

FINANCE ACT 1965

Section 33 – Replacement of business assets

THE Council had submitted that, since the section specifically refers to 'carrying on a trade', it appeared that where one company in a group (for example the parent) holds assets such as property or plant for use by members of the group, it will not be entitled to the relief given by this section if it does not carry on a trade itself. The Board's representatives stated that in their view the circumstances of a company in a group not carrying on a trade were covered by Schedule 13, paragraph 6, and that instructions to this effect had been sent to Inspectors of Taxes.

Section 75 – Assessment of close companies to income tax in respect of certain loans

2. The Board's representatives gave an assurance that where a loan to a participator is repaid, the interest on the tax payable on any assessment under section 75 would not run beyond the date of repayment.

Section 84 and Schedule 20 – Transitional relief for existing companies with overseas trading income

3. Under Schedule 20 a parent company claiming over-spill relief under section 84 may elect for group treatment and thus receive the over-spill relief due to its subsidiaries. The Board's representatives gave an assurance that the right to make an election would apply even if the parent company held its overseas investments through other United Kingdom companies and so did not itself possess a source of overseas income.

Schedule 7, paragraph 3 – Capital distribution by companies

4. It had appeared to the Council that on the liquidation of a company a balance of income received before or after the commencement of winding up after payment of corporation tax, income tax and surtax, would count as a capital distribution giving rise to a possible chargeable gain for capital gains tax. It was therefore submitted that any amount subject to apportionment and assessment to surtax should be excluded from the definition of 'capital distribution' in paragraph 3 (4). The Board's representatives stated that they had been advised that Schedule 6, paragraph 2, adequately dealt with the position though it was possible that difficulties might arise in practice in making the apportionment of the amount which was subject to income taxation.

Schedule 18, Part 1 – Supplementary provisions about close companies

5. The Board's representatives stated that their practice for profits tax purposes of not regarding a parent company as a director of a subsidiary solely by reason of its shareholding would be continued for the purpose of corporation tax.

Section 39 – Cancellation of tax advantages from certain transactions in securities

6. The Board's representatives stated that section 39 (2) was necessary to protect the revenue against a double set-off of franked investment income received by the company. If the company made no claim to set off its franked investment income for Schedule F purposes, the Revenue would seek to assess only the net tax which had been avoided. The Chief Secretary to the Treasury had given an assurance that the subsection was intended to counteract a double allowance and no more.

7. Section 39 (6) defines 'non-taxable', in relation to a person receiving consideration, as meaning that the recipient does not bear tax on it as income (apart from section 28, Finance Act 1960). The Board's representatives gave an assurance that, if there were a charge to income tax on the recipient under section 28 (as extended) capital gains tax would be displaced, in accordance with Schedule 6, paragraph 2 (1) of the Finance Act 1965.

Schedule 6, paragraph 11 – Claims relating to corporation tax

8. The Board's representatives gave an assurance that for the purpose of paragraph 11 (4) the agreement of a loss for corporation tax purposes would automatically constitute a claim for carry forward of the loss, unless relief for it were claimed in some other form.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

The Capital Gains Tax Regulations 1967

S.I. 1967 No. 149

These regulations make certain provisions in relation to capital gains tax appeals which are not covered by the general statutory provisions on appeals. In particular, they lay down procedures under which a question of market value or apportionment which affects the liability of two or more persons (for example, a donor and donee, or vendor and purchaser in a transaction not at arm's length) can be settled.

The Betterment Levy (Tenancies and Reversions) Regulations 1967

S.I. 1967 No. 298

These regulations adapt the provisions of the Land Commissions Act 1967 relating to betterment levy to meet the special circumstances affecting tenancies and reversions.

Price 1s 9d net. April 6th, 1967.

The Case F Supplemental Regulations 1967

S.I. 1967 No. 299

These regulations supplement the Case F General Regulations 1967. They provide for disallowing the use, on the occasion of a chargeable act or event subsequent to certain acts or events falling within Case F, of a base value derived from the last relevant disposition which was used in the Case F assessment. They also provide for determining the 'modified value of the dutiable interest' for the purpose of giving an allowance in respect of estate duty in a Case F assessment.

The Betterment Levy (Credits from Case F) Regulations 1967

S.I. 1967 No. 300

These regulations deal with the application of Schedule 11 (credit carried forward from previous chargeable act or event) to a case where a credit is carried forward from an assessment of levy in respect of a chargeable act or event in Case F.

Under the formula used for assessing levy in Cases D and E it is possible for the deduction to exceed the compensation or consideration, thus giving a negative amount as a figure on which the levy would otherwise be charged. This situation arises where more development value was paid for on a previous acquisition than has been taken into account in the Case D or E assessment. In these cases a credit is established under Schedule 11. Regulations 3 and 4 provide for a similar carrying forward of a credit in these parallel Case F assessments for use in some future assessment of levy.

The regulations apply to England and Wales.

The Betterment Levy (Notification) Regulations 1967

S.I. 1967 No. 309

These regulations made under the Land Commission Act 1967 prescribe, for the purposes of betterment levy, the manner in which various chargeable acts or events arising under Cases A, B, C, D and E shall be notified to the Land Commission; and, in the case of dispositions, require their notification to the Commission within thirty days (unless exceptionally the Commission extend such period). The Act itself (Schedule 9, paragraphs 11-14) specifies further requirements for giving information in connection with certain kinds of acquisition of land by authorities possessing compulsory purchase powers.

The regulations also prescribe:

- (i) the particulars to be included in applications made under section 60 for a direction that no levy be chargeable in Case C where a disposition under Case A or B has taken place shortly beforehand; and
- (ii) the particulars to be included in notices served under section 62 on the Commission by builders and developers of residential property claiming exemption from levy in Case C in respect of certain interests in land which they held on September 23rd, 1965.

The regulations apply to England and Wales.

April 6th, 1967.

The Betterment Levy (Planning Assumptions) Regulations 1967

S.I. 1967 No. 318

For the purposes of assessing betterment levy several paragraphs in Schedules 4 and 6 to the Land Commission Act 1967 require certain planning assumptions to be made as regards material development, namely (in general) that planning permission:

- (a) would be granted for any development which does not constitute material development, but
- (b) would not be granted for any development which constitutes material development.

The expression 'material development' is defined in section 99 (2) of the Act as meaning any development other than (broadly) development for which planning permission is granted by a General Development Order made under the Town and Country Planning Act 1962, development falling within Schedule 3 to that Act and development of any class prescribed by regulations (see the Material Development Regulations 1967).

These regulations made under Schedule 6, paragraph 11, provide that development of the descriptions scheduled to the regulations, which does not constitute material development as mentioned above, shall, nevertheless, be treated as material development for the purposes of the relevant paragraphs of Schedules 4 and 6.

The regulations apply to England and Wales.

In Parliament

Dividend Increases

MR STRATTON MILLS asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies have increased their dividends since July 20th, 1966; how many of these consulted the Treasury; how many of these had his agreement; and if he will tabulate the reasons in these cases.

MR MACDERMOT: Up to March 13th, 1967, 1,255 companies announced unchanged, 490 announced decreased and 185 announced proposed increased dividends. About 50 rescinded their proposed increases. Fifteen increased their dividends due to a misunderstanding about the precise application of the standstill policy in their particular cases. The reasons cannot be tabulated.

Companies Act 1948: Auditors

MR FORD asked the President of the Board of Trade how many persons have been authorized by his Department to act as auditors under the provisions of section 161 (1) paragraph (b) of the Companies Act 1948 since the Act came into operation.

MR DARLING: 2,133.

MR FORD asked the President of the Board of Trade how many persons have been authorized by his Department to act as auditors under the provisions of section 161 (1) paragraph (b) of the Companies Act 1948 during the years 1960 to 1966, inclusive, in each of the three categories mentioned therein.

MR DARLING: As having similar qualifications obtained outside the United Kingdom, 423; as having obtained adequate knowledge and experience in the course of employment by a member of a body of accountants recognized for the purposes of section 161 (1) (a) of the Act, 346; as having before August 6th, 1947, practised in Great Britain as an accountant, 461.

Companies Act 1948: Recognized Bodies

MR FORD asked the President of the Board of Trade which bodies have been recognized by his department for the purposes of section 161 (1) (a) of the Companies Act 1948; and what considerations were taken into account when so doing.

JOHN FOORD & COMPANY

137 VICTORIA STREET, LONDON SW1

Telephone Victoria 2002 (3 lines)

REVALUATION OF ASSETS

WORKS, FACTORIES, PLANT & MACHINERY, Etc.

Mr DARLING: The bodies for the time being recognized under section 161 (1) (a) of the Companies Act 1948, are:

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland.

The main consideration taken into account was a statement by the Cohen Committee on Company Law to the effect that the appointment by the Treasury of members of these bodies as 'Public Auditors' for the purposes of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act 1893, and the Industrial Assurance Act 1923, indicated the qualifications which an auditor of a public company should have.

Mr FORD asked the President of the Board of Trade which bodies have applied unsuccessfully for recognition by his department for the purposes of section 161 (1) (a) of the Companies Act 1948; and what were the date of such applications, the date of the final reply by his department and the reasons for non-recognition.

Mr DARLING: It is not the practice of the Board of Trade to disclose information about unsuccessful applications of this kind.

Hansard, March 21st, 1967. Written Answers, col. 251.

Schedule E: Expenses

Mr WHITAKER asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total sum of Schedule E expenses claimed and allowed in each of the last five years.

Mr MACDERMOT: The total amounts of the deductions allowed for expenses under Schedule E are given in the annual Reports of the Board of Inland Revenue. The latest available figures are for the years 1960-61 to 1964-65 and are as follows:

1960-61 .. ..	183
1961-62 .. ..	232
1962-63 .. ..	245
1963-64 .. ..	265

COMPANY MEETING

TATE & LYLE*PROSPECTS FOR SUGAR IN COMMON MARKET

The 64th annual general meeting of Tate & Lyle Limited was held on March 22nd, in London.

Addressing the meeting, Sir Ian D. Lyle, the President, opened his statement with a reference to diversification. Tate & Lyle had diversified while expanding. Sugar had always been the background but the Company could consider new fields. The business would be dominated by sugar for a long time to come.

World prices of sugar seriously affect the business when they are as low as they have been recently. Prospects for a rise do not seem bright; a new International Agreement was needed. He thought it unfortunate that the Common Market members - high cost producers - are catering in their sugar plans for surplus production, exportable only with the help of heavy subsidy.

While Jamaica has shown a small profit, Trinidad has returned a loss. In British Honduras, production has been cut this year but the capacity stood ready for any improvement in prices.

In Canada, the major interest is in refining. The Canadian beet industry was affected by low prices and our Chatham plant might not operate for lack of beet. Canada and Dominion Sugar Company are giving considerable thought to expansion, perhaps outside sugar.

He reported that Rhodesia Sugar Refineries continued under no-profit no-loss arrangements. It was impossible to forecast the return to normal conditions here. In Zambia the picture was brighter. Sales of refined sugar continue to rise at 20% per annum and the Nakambala Estate, designed to make Zambia self-sufficient, was developing well.

Other Activities

United Molasses world trading had produced good results and activities had expanded in a number of countries.

British refining and service companies earned profits very similar to 1965, despite the substantial drop in our exports against foreign subsidised exports. Reorganisation of manpower and capital assets proceeds. Speciality sugars were receiving new promotion.

Shipping activities have greatly increased by the acquisition of United Molasses. The fleet of 24 vessels has a deadweight tonnage of over 400,000 tons. He was glad to say it was trading at a profit even at today's depressed levels.

A. & W. Smith, manufacturers of sugar machinery, had started 1967 well with a very large contract in Venezuela.

Sir Ian Lyle outlined the future for sugar in the event of our joining the Common Market. If, as he hoped, the Commonwealth Sugar Agreement continued after our entry, the pattern of refining in the United Kingdom would not greatly change. He was confident about our ability to meet added competition and even to enter European markets previously closed. If, however, Commonwealth sugars should become restricted, then operations could alter drastically, calling for much adaptation. He referred to the joint company formed with the Belgian refiners, Raffinerie Tirlemontoise, to explore opportunities on the Continent.

Harsh Effect of New Taxation

Group accounts reflect, he said, the harsh effect of the new taxation; with profits before tax some £1,300,000 lower than 1965 total tax charge was up by over £500,000. A profit level which covered the net dividend twice under the Income Tax and Profits Tax regime will now provide only a 1.6 times cover for the same gross dividend. It seemed inevitable there would be less capital formation from ploughed back profits in the future.

Looking ahead to profits, the President said there must be some improvement in world prices before our raw sugar investments can regain their profitability, nor could we expect any income from Rhodesia. The rest of the Group was likely at least to maintain the levels of the last year.

Referring to information given in Company accounts, he saw no reason to be coy or ashamed about subscriptions in support of Free Enterprise; it was a duty to protect the assets of the Company. They intended to continue such payments in the interest of the Company for as long as there existed powerful groups openly committed to the destruction of free enterprise and the abolition of private profit.

Sir Ian welcomed Viscount Boyd to the Board and concluded with thanks to employees for their loyalty and efforts to promote the Company's prosperity.

The report and accounts were adopted.

A Deed of Gratitude

A legacy for the Methodist Homes for the Aged is a means many generous people adopt in expressing gratitude for their own home and for serenity and peace-of-mind in their old age.

There are so many who are less fortunate and for lonely and anxious old people the Methodist Homes for the Aged are a haven and a home. Our constantly growing income from legacies, more than any other factor, has enabled us to embark on the capital expenditure for twenty-five Homes. Unfortunately even these will accommodate only a few of the hundreds of deserving people on the tragically long waiting list.

We thankfully acknowledge this valuable assistance and ask you please to remember the Methodist Homes for the Aged when advising your clients.

AN IMPORTANT NEW BOOK
FOR MANAGEMENT — JUST PUBLISHED

PLANNING FOR PROFITS

by DOUGLAS GARBUTT, A.C.I.S., A.C.W.A.

ANOTHER BOOK
IN THE GEE'S
SERIES

This book presents an unusual combination of sound theory and practical common sense. For every business man, but especially the manager in the smaller firm, it outlines a simple system which can give effective profit planning. With this system, a manager can fix fair and accurate prices, and can decide which orders offer him most profit and which least. Costs can be established and comparisons made which will spotlight inefficiencies. Development of effective, logical and acceptable cost standards can be made to which all members of the firm can conform.

Direct costing overcomes many of the drawbacks of conventional costing systems and the author advocates a system of simple charts which offer a flexible basis for profit-planning.

The author has a remarkable combination of qualifications for writing this book: it is based on first-hand consultancy work which he undertook by virtue of his qualifications as a Cost Accountant and Chartered Secretary.

He is, however, also a lecturer with many years of full- and part-time teaching experience. He has been Acting Technical Officer for the Institute of Cost and Works Accountants and is well known for the many articles which he has contributed to the technical press. Finally, he is a qualified teacher and holds an Academic Diploma in Education.

This book is recommended for the benefit of the business man and manager who is concerned with establishing and maintaining profit objectives for his business. It should also appeal to students who wish to understand the techniques of planning for profits and who are interested in how they can be applied in practice.

From Tuesday April 11 The Times Business News appears in THE TIMES every day

But what is The Times Business News?

The Times Business News is a complete business newspaper carried within The Times itself. It will cover industry, technology, commerce and finance on a world-wide scale and in depth. It will place special emphasis on industry and technology.

LOS ANGELES/ TEXAS/CHICAGO/NY

New York alone is not America, and so the TBN will have correspondents on the spot in the industrial complexes on the West Coast, in Texas, in Chicago, in Canada and in the Buffalo/Rochester/NY State area as well as in Wall Street.

TOKYO/THE RUHR/ WESTMINSTER

Wherever in the world important business and industrial activities take place there will also be TBN correspondents. This means both hemispheres and all continents.

Tony Vice, Business Editor

And since the strategies and tactics of governments are significant to business, the TBN will hold a watching brief for its readers in this area too. For that purpose it will enjoy not only its own resources but also those of The Times newspaper itself.

HULL/TYNESIDE/ THE RHONDDA/ BIRMINGHAM

Nor will the TBN miss the fact that the business of Britain is not carried on exclusively in Throgmorton and Threadneedle Street.

It will have men centred all over the U.K. wherever things are happening which can affect the plans, careers and intentions of management, workers, technologists and investors in Britain.

MADISON AVENUE/ MAYFAIR/HOLBORN

The TBN will also concern itself with the industries behind industry: marketing and advertising. It will carry client, agency and service company news and, once more, the news will be international and treated in depth.

MACHINE OIL AS WELL AS TICKERTAPE INK

Business in the world today is not an academic matter of closing prices on tickertape and unexpected rallies in the pound.

It is a question of which companies are building plant, where and why they are doing it and if they are likely to achieve their targets; of new processes or methods or equipment which can throw the plans of people who don't know about them completely out of kilter; of forays, reconnaissances and full scale invasions from abroad (from Europe as well as the U.S.A.) into British industry and into the British high street.

Peter Jay, Economic Correspondent

It is concerned with what is tediously and continuously called 'the brain drain' but which is really a multi-directional shift and exchange of brain and manpower within and without Britain.

So The Times Business News, complete as its financial information will be, will have more than tickertape ink in it, it will also have machine oil, midnight oil and brickdust.

In short, The Times Business News intends to miss nothing, and what it does not miss neither will it misinterpret.

WHO ARE YOU IF YOU READ THE TIMES BUSINESS NEWS?

You are whoever and whatever you are: a newspaper does not define its readers; it is defined by them and what they want from it.

You may be a tycoon, or an assistant executive of some kind or another; you may be an entrepreneur, an investor, an engineer, a technologist, an applied scientist or a student; you may be a supermarketeer or a shopkeeper aware of the presence of supermarkets around him. You may be an office boy.

WHERE DOES THE TIMES BUSINESS NEWS LEAVE THE TIMES NEWSPAPER ITSELF?

It leaves it precisely where it was this morning, in the forefront of the news on Fleet Street as the most changed and developing newspaper you can pick off a news-stand.

The TBN simply complements a newspaper which already covers home and overseas news with substance and insight, that offers the refreshment of daily pages on the arts and entertainment that expects women to be woman enough to read the daily women's page, but man enough to read the rest of the newspaper too, that covers sport as accurately as it does politics and the law, whose correspondence columns are a debating ground and often a battle-field for the authoritative and the contentious on important subjects every day.

The Times is already the daily newspaper for every man who requires journalism to be both serious and pleasurable.

With the addition of The Times Business News, The Times will become the one complete daily newspaper for the businessman.

LEICESTER PERMANENT BUILDING SOCIETY

Mr Norman D. Ellis Comments on Hampering Restrictions

The Annual General Meeting of the Leicester Permanent Building Society was held on April 3rd, at Oadby, Leicestershire.

Mr Norman D. Ellis, O.B.E., M.A., J.P., (Chairman), presided and, in the course of his speech, said:

During 1966 receipts from investors together with interest remaining with the Society increased by £6 million to over £50 million but this was offset by a similar increase in withdrawals so that our investment surplus at £22 million was roughly the same as last year. As a result total assets increased during the year from £150 million to £173 million and we lent £34 million compared with my original estimate of £35 million made on this occasion a year ago.

Following the recent reduction in Bank Rate to 6% the Chairman of the Building Societies Association stated that there was no likelihood of cheaper rates for home loans in the immediate future and added 'Any premature reduction in the rate of interest paid to building society investors might well create a shortage of mortgage funds and imperil the success of the National Housing Plan.' We have no hesitation in giving our full support to these views.

The market value of our Government securities at the end of 1966 showed a surplus over the book value of £300,000. We were also able during the year to take a profit of £207,925 on the realisation of part of our portfolio.

Restrictions on Building Society Activities

It is perhaps not always appreciated that the restrictions to which building societies are subjected prevent us at times from acting in the widest interest of our members. In comparison, Banks, Insurance Companies and other financial institutions enjoy much greater freedom. The following are a few examples of what I have in mind.

Special Advances include loans in excess of £7,000 to private individuals although these are for normal private houses.

Investors are limited to a maximum of £5,000 in any one society.

We are not allowed to offer investment facilities coupled with any form of life assurance.

Prospects for 1967

It is hoped that during 1967 our total assets will reach £200 million. This will enable us to make £40 million available for lending on mortgages and will require an investment surplus of £24 million. Experience over the first three months of the year seems to indicate that these results could be achieved.

Make its point!

New NCR Point Range machines for instant conversion on your premises—free!

When the Government's plans for decimalisation come into force in 1971, serious problems will face the business which has not planned ahead. Long delays in converting machines, costly interruptions to vital work, make-shift conversions which reduce the efficiency and value of equipment—all these could become very real possibilities for those who postpone vital decisions.

NCR has introduced a revolutionary scheme which enables you to solve these problems now. The unique Point Range of decimal adding and accounting machines is available to give you top-class sterling operation with the facility for instant conversion to decimals after the introduction of the new currency. This operation will be carried out without charge on your own premises provided it is covered by an NCR maintenance agreement. No need to suspend operations in any department for days or weeks. No need to use temporary machines. No need to send your machine away for factory conversion.

Ask NCR now about solving your decimal conversion problems instantly and effectively. Provision has also been made to deal with existing equipment, and full details are available from NCR.

The NCR Point Range covers a wide range of cash registers, adding and accounting machines. It is backed by NCR's unequalled knowledge of business systems and all their unique practical experience gained in countries which have already switched to decimals. For advice on your decimalisation problem, send the coupon now to NCR.

Competition in Lombard Street

ON Wednesday of last week, Barclays Bank announced an £11½ million computer order that will enable them to complete the automation of their branch book-keeping by 1970, while on Friday the National Provincial Bank announced 'a revolutionary scheme that takes all the tears out of paying the big annual bills'. National Provincial's new 'budget account' service offers customers the opportunity of paying all the 'big annual bills' by monthly instalments – transfers to a second account, in much the same way as many orderly-minded people (including, no doubt, not a few accountants) already do, but with the added benefit of automatic overdraft in months when it is needed; the charge, including such occasional overdrafts – 10s on every £50 of the annual total.

Two such news items from the banks in one week are not the phenomenon they would have been a few years back. In all the three hundred years and more of the history of banking in Britain there can hardly have been a more active period of change and development than the present. The crises of the nineteenth century, with their panic bank failures, and the final round of take-overs at the end of the First World War that produced today's Big Five, were indeed of fundamental importance, but they lacked the diversity of enterprise that marks today's activity. And there is today a competitive element in the changes that would have surprised critics of even ten years ago who regarded the banks as a massive and inert cartel.

March, which saw the banks making a joint announcement about their improved money transmission services, saw also the National Provincial as the first of the clearing banks to go in for factoring (through its subsidiary, North Central Finance, it took up a 20 per cent interest in Portland Group Factors). In March, too, Westminster and Barclays announced their intention to provide 'instant cash' machines experimentally at a few branches; Midland had earlier spoken in more general terms of similar plans.

The contrast between the joint announcement and the separate releases is significant. Co-operation between the banks on money transmission is essential – it is virtually impossible for one bank to go it alone in anything that depends on inter-bank clearing arrangements, and even the National Giro will have to depend on those arrangements for part of its services. But on other matters there is no such compulsion (interest rates would certainly come out at the same levels if there were no agreement); and ever since the hire-purchase/personal loan/personal cheque explosion of 1958 there has been a great deal of solitary trail blazing.

For although when another 'first' is announced (there is obviously keen competition for 'firsts'!), the customers of other banks tend to assume that although beaten to the post this time, their own banks will catch up in a week or two, but this is by no means always true. In 1958 all the big banks followed Barclays into H.-P. and most followed Midland into personal loans, but Midland were able to retain their personal cheques as an exclusive. Amid the more recent activities Barclays remain the only credit card enthusiasts (Westminster's participation in Diners' Club seems something less than enthusiastic), Lloyds so far have the only bank unit trust, National Provincial the only factoring interest. 'So far' must obviously be the key phrase; but the picture is interestingly un-uniform.

When similar courses are followed by more than one bank, decisions give every appearance of having been separately worked out. The 'instant cash' announcements were interesting in this connection. The Barclays release came a day after Westminster's, too quick for imitation, but collaboration was ruled out by the fact that the two banks are to adopt different techniques.

The banks' P.R.O.s – all the Big Five and some others now have them – have plenty of material to pass out to the Press. Not so long ago the National Provincial's first escalator branch in London would have been more noteworthy news than it is now. The new London office of Barclays (France), through which Barclays will deal in Euro-dollars, is merely a further development in the complications of the deposit scene; Westminster's advertised payroll accounting service is assumed (probably rightly in this case) to be available also from their competitors. But all these developments, whether directly of interest to customers – like credit cards and twenty-four-hour cash; or serving only the long-term prosperity of the banks – like factoring and unit trusts, involve management decisions of moment. The general managers' plates are even fuller than those of their P.R.O.s.

At the moment the banks are successively committing themselves to dates by which their full computerization of branches is expected to be completed: the Barclays' target of 1970 is currently the most optimistic. One of the effects is likely to be that customers will be able to cash their cheques at any branch of their bank. But one may wonder with these, as with other bank announcements, whether customers are as interested as they should be.

For although it is clearly in the public interest that the banks should be progressively competitive, what evidence there is suggests that most customers are not even charges-conscious. The Companies Bill has made a tiny minority of bank shareholders aware, and vocal to that effect at the annual meetings, that the banks might well disclose more in their accounts. Probably a good deal more than a small minority, certainly of business customers, are interest-conscious, but few of them have any very strong feelings about rates which they know are the cheapest finance in the market. Even the possibility of Saturday closing is probably a matter of greater import to the managements – and their staffs – than to most of their customers. On all these matters Mr AUBREY JONES will no doubt be commenting in his several times postponed report, which is likely to give the banks multiple headlines and perhaps a headache or two as well. But if new enterprise is any measure they are ready to deal with almost anything that the P.I.B. may produce.

How far will new enterprise help the banks in their coming competition with the National Giro? There can be little doubt that the advent of the Post Office's current account service, and the fact that it is clearly intending to be fiercely competitive for what the banks could otherwise regard as their own new business have encouraged the spirit of innovation in Lombard Street. But it is a mistake to suggest, as some commentators have suggested, that all the innovation is a direct result of the Giro threat. Barclays' Press release last week about their computer plans included a reminder that they were the first British bank to use computers for accounting and the first to use telecommunication in the computer operation – and that was a good while before the Giro project took any substantial shape. All the banks' computer programmes, involving from the start very heavy expenditure in a largely uncharted field, ante-dated the Giro which has doubtless benefited in its own computer planning from the banks' early trials.

National Provincial's budget accounts, however troublesome they may be in operation to the managers who have to approve each budget, should attract a useful number of the more responsible-minded young; and National Provincial, too, can look back to its pre-Giro pioneering of the first of what have now become more general cheque cards. On September 13th, 1958, we commented here on the 'New look in banking'; it could be that the continuing, and increasing, liveliness in the banking boardrooms will give the Post Office a good run for its money. There can be hardly any doubt that the public at large will benefit.

Overseas Investment Just Gets By

A SURPRISING amount of interest and attention has been given to last week's interim report on the research work which has been carried on at the Department of Applied Economics at Cambridge into the economic effects of direct investment overseas by British companies.<sup>1</sup> This research had its origin in the concern felt by the Confederation of British Industry that the climate of public opinion has been moving against overseas investment.

THE CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER and the Treasury generally, by words and actions, have shown their sympathy with this 'new view' of overseas investment. The overriding interest of the CHANCELLOR during these last two and a half years has been to turn the large deficit on current and long-term capital account into a surplus. Little wonder, therefore, that he tended to look askance at the rate of investment abroad by United Kingdom companies which has averaged £300 million a year over the past five years or so.

The C.B.I. commissioned the study in July 1965 – possibly in the belief that an impartial review would support its case against restrictions on overseas investment. It is greatly to the credit of the C.B.I., and of the Steering Committee set up under the chairmanship of Sir DUNCAN OPPENHEIM, that the impartiality of the study was never in question. The authors of the interim report state: 'Not only has the independence of the department been most scrupulously honoured, but we have received help in many ways. The C.B.I. clearly deserves much of the credit for the very high response rate which we have enjoyed and for the quality of that response'.

The primary object of the inquiry was to assess the effects of direct investment overseas by British companies on the United Kingdom balance of payments and Britain's economy generally. To that end, the investigators made use of whatever statistical material was available but supplemented it by a large-scale detailed inquiry of a most complex character.

It was early recognized that this inquiry would need to be an exercise in co-operation, with personal contact between the research team and company representatives playing a very important part. The questionnaires used were thoroughly discussed by thirteen companies who agreed to act as 'guinea pigs', and the finalized forms which resulted from this co-operation were sent to fifty-eight companies. The interim report is derived from the processing of fifty-two returns and by the time the final report is prepared, four other returns are expected to be available. This is an astonishingly high response rate.

The basic statistics which were available to the research team show that in the period 1960–64, direct overseas investment by United Kingdom companies, at £300 million a year, exceeded inwards investment in the United Kingdom by £120 million a year. Net investment in the United Kingdom by home and overseas companies averaged £1,500 million a year, the deficit on United Kingdom balance of payments (current account and long-term capital account together) averaged £250 million a year in a total of debit items of some £7,000 million, and income from direct investments equalled £420 million a year.

The statistics derived from the Reddaway inquiry are also given as averages – for the period 1955–64 – but the authors state that there were wide divergences from the averages quoted. The analysis is in terms of the effects, for mining and manufacturing, per £100 addition to net operating assets overseas. The initial effect is a gain of £9 to United Kingdom exports by way of purchases of capital equipment. There is then a continuing effect which consists mostly of profits of £8 when depreciation is calculated on historical cost or £6 10s when computed on replacement cost. Capital appreciation could raise the £8 figure to £11. Contributing to this £8 average are £14 for building materials down to £5 for non-electrical engineering.

The average net continuing effect of utilizing the £100 of net operating assets abroad is to raise British exports of goods and services by about £1 10s – i.e. the amount is small but positive.

Since each £100 addition to net operating assets yields only £9 by way of direct exports in the first year, it follows that there is a financing charge on the £91 external obligations incurred. These may be of varying kinds – an increase in sterling balances, borrowing from the International Monetary Fund, disinvestment of United Kingdom overseas portfolio holdings, or a straight loss to the reserves.

The average rate of profits in 1955–64 on net operating assets, after depreciation but before overseas taxation, was 14½ per cent. The post-tax return was 8 per cent. In considering the true net gain, regard must be had to the fact that interest may have to be paid on the external financing charge. The interim report assesses the total net gain at about £4 per year to the balance of payments – that is, after the first £9 of direct exports.

If overseas investment were reduced by £100 million, there would be a loss of direct exports of £9 million in the first year and a continuing loss of £4 million a year for succeeding years by way of loss of the small direct exports of £1½ million a year and profits less tax, less interest, on the external financing charge. After four years, £21 million would have been lost to the balance of payments current account but £79 million saved by way of external charges.

The authors conclude that an average act of direct investment overseas will strengthen future balance of payments on current account. In consequence, a steady rate of direct investment overseas would – if maintained long enough – provide an annual surplus large enough to finance the annual quota of new investment. Nevertheless, each single act has a large immediate adverse effect on the balance of payments, so that the restriction of the outflow brings a cash or financing benefit for a number of years. In view of the recent succession of balance of payments deficits this benefit may be of overriding importance in the short-run.

The interim report suggests that overseas investment by United Kingdom companies may provide small benefits by way of increased efficiency in home activities. It does not seriously affect the level of home investment. And the final conclusion which may be drawn? Overseas investment is worth while, but only just, and then only as a part of a long-term policy.

Registration of Company Documents

INTENDED as a practical guide to company registrars and others concerned with the registration of documents presented to companies, Representative Capacity – The Registration of English and Scottish Documents by Companies, a booklet published recently by The Chartered Institute of Secretaries, should prove of considerable value to such persons.

The introduction classifies the documents presented for registration as (a) those affecting shareholdings but not requiring entries in share registers or endorsement of share certificates; (b) those affecting shareholdings and requiring entries in share registers; and (c) those, in addition to affecting shareholdings and requiring entries in registers, also requiring endorsement, amendment or substitution of share certificates. There follows useful advice on the system of keeping a document register and a comparative list of English and Scottish documents.

The rest of the booklet is divided into two sections. The first lists the documents registrable by English companies, including those registrable by Scottish companies as well. Where a document in this section is not registrable in Scotland – because it has no true Scottish equivalent – this is clearly shown. The second section sets out the documents registrable by Scottish companies and, unless otherwise indicated, also by English companies; in other words, it is directly complementary to the first section.

Every document in each section is considered under three headings: nature of document, registration requirements, and registration procedure, and this is a valuable attribute of the booklet. It seems a little odd, however, to find included notice of lien, with details of registration requirements followed by a statement under the heading of procedure that such a notice should be rejected.

There is one curious error: the Master in Lunacy became the Court of Protection as long ago as 1947. This looks like research in out-of-date authorities. Apart from this, the booklet appears to be accurate and it is certainly well worth having.

Ombudsman opens his Office

SIR EDMUND COMPTON, the new Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration (or Ombudsman as he may be better known) has now opened his office and will begin to investigate complaints referred to him by Members of Parliament. He will make reports on individual cases to the M.P. who raised the grievance with him, and more general reports on the work of his department will be published as Parliamentary papers.

On his first day in his new post, Sir Edmund – who was previously well known as Comptroller and Auditor-General – had already received 400 complaints, but only some thirty of these originated from M.P.s., the others therefore being invalid.

Complaints to the Parliamentary Commissioner may come from either individuals or any body of persons claiming to have sustained injustice as a result of maladministration on the part of Government departments.

Scottish Institute's New President

PROFESSOR D. S. ANDERSON, M.A., C.A., senior partner in Wallace & Somerville, Chartered Accountants, of Edinburgh, was elected President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland for 1967-68 at the Institute's annual meeting held on Friday of last week (reported elsewhere in this issue).

Educated at Viewpark School and George Watson's College, Professor Anderson was admitted to The Society of Accountants in Edinburgh in 1925 and practised on his own until 1929, when he became a partner in his present firm. As a young man he was a useful rugby player and also became a tennis player of very considerable ability. He represented the Braid Tennis Club and became President of The East of Scotland Lawn Tennis Association.

Professor Anderson has served the Institute on many committees and was a member of the Council of the Edinburgh Society from 1942 to 1946 and of the Institute from 1955 to 1958. He has also given distinguished service to the community in a number of ways. He served for many years in the Special Constables, and in 1965 became Moderator of The High Constables and Guard of Honour of Holyroodhouse. For six years he was a member of the South-Eastern Regional Hospital Board, Scotland, as Finance Convener, and for a number of years was Professor of Accounting and Business Method at Edinburgh University.

He has served the Watsonian War Relief and Benevolent Fund over a long period and in 1961 The Watsonian Club gave him their greatest honour by making him President. A keen golfer, he is a past Captain of Mortonhall Golf Club and a former member of council of Luffness New Gif Club.

Professor Anderson is married and has a son who is presently serving his apprenticeship in an Edinburgh firm.

Mr John Alexander Stewart, C.A., is the new Vice-President of the Institute. Admitted in 1949, he is a partner in Kerr, MacLeod & Macfarlan, Chartered Accountants, of Glasgow. He has been a member of the Council since 1966 and a member of the Glasgow Local Committee since 1963. From 1963 to 1965 he was Convener of the Institute's Summer School Committee.

Business Equipment Exhibitions in 1967

GREAT BRITAIN'S office equipment industry is making its biggest-ever sales effort through home and overseas exhibitions and trade fairs in 1967. Announcing the industry's exhibition programme, the Business Equipment Trade Association – representing most United Kingdom manufacturing and marketing companies in the field – states that this will include two major exhibitions in London and in Manchester.

This year's London Business Efficiency Exhibition will occupy the two largest halls at Olympia from October 2nd to 11th. Some one hundred and eighty companies are expected to take part. Many of the products which will be on view – some for the first time publicly – will range from computers to fire-resisting safes. Over fifty companies will be taking part in the Manchester exhibition at City Hall, from April 17th to 21st. The city is one of the three main provincial business centres – the others being Birmingham and Leeds – covered in rotation by the Association's programme for regular Business Efficiency Exhibitions outside London.

Individual member companies have taken part previously in both the Lyons International Trade Fair and the Hanover Fair but this is the first year in which the Association has provided space for its members at these events under direct BETA sponsorship. The Lyons Fair took place last month, and the organizers of the Hanover Fair, being held from April 29th to May 7th, have allocated 2,690 sq. ft for the BETA members' stands.

Industrial Training Schemes for I.C.W.A. Students

A NEW booklet entitled Training Schemes for Cost and Management Accountants: an Employer's Guide has been prepared by The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants to assist employers in providing, on a systematic basis, the experience required by registered students of the Institute.

Although planned training schemes for registered students are organized by a considerable number of companies, there are still very many who do not have such schemes and it is for this reason that the guide is to be widely distributed throughout industry.

The first part of the booklet describes the general form of a training scheme, and the second part sets out a detailed syllabus of all the items of experience which a programme of training should, ideally, include. The various subjects covered range from cost accounting in relation to such matters as wages, stores and overheads, to more sophisticated subjects such as E.D.P., network analysis and operational research.

The Institute points out that it is not possible to frame a scheme which would meet the requirements of every industry and organization, and states that each scheme needs to be individually planned to a certain extent to meet the requirements of the undertaking concerned. Nevertheless the booklet will no doubt be welcomed by industry as a very useful guide.

Parliamentary Questions

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer is to be asked in the House of Commons on April 18th whether he will withdraw Inland Revenue Stencil No. 85 issued by Her Majesty's Inspector of Taxes, London Provincial 2 District, requesting details of taxpayers' assets. A question on this has been tabled by Mr John Biffen (Cons.), who will also call on the Chancellor for a statement on the subject.

In another question on the same day, Mr John Lee (Lab.), is to ask Mr Callaghan to issue a White Paper giving statistics, from information available to him from tax returns and other sources, of the distribution of privately-owned real property in the United Kingdom.

Mr Frank Judd (Lab.) wants to know what was the estimated amount of tax evasion in the financial years 1964-65, 1965-66 and 1966-67, and in what categories of employment the evasion was most significant.

A further question, tabled by Mr Frank Allaun (Lab.), asks what steps the Chancellor proposes to take to deal with long-standing, dormant, charitable funds, and what is their estimated total amount.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

OUR fourth internal auditor had got another job so it became necessary to select a replacement. Our policy has always been to appoint somebody from our existing staff, on the grounds that he'd know from the start the tangled background of office politics or salesmen's devious intrigues common to most biggish companies, and the list of possible candidates was accordingly short.

Prinny sat in at the reviewing conference – as befitted the personnel director – hearing all, but playing his own cards close to his chest. Scotty sat in as sales manager, a concession due to the fact that the internal auditor usually concentrated on his merchanting activities. I did the work. In other words, I prepared the names in order of merit and nominated my choice, thereafter standing firm against alternate wheedling and coercion.

Our first internal auditor had been keen, alert, and practical, so he became assistant sales manager and would have had a brilliant future with us – if he'd poisoned Scotty. This drastic solution being undesirable, he became general manager elsewhere. Our second stalwart was a methodical, painstaking character who by degrees cleaned up some clumsy systems and excessive paperwork – an operation distinctly profitable for us – but his public image was negligible. His urge to shun the limelight went too far, so we settled him in the tax and insurances section where he's a great success.

With number three we made the mistake of leaving him too long in the post and he became frustrated and quarrelsome. Internal auditors, it's important to note, shouldn't be retained on the job indefinitely in a medium-sized organization like ours, as they tend to cover the same ground again and again with mounting chagrin. Rotational assignments help their morale and give their colleagues a flow of new ideas.

Contrariwise, number four liked the work so much that he left us to join a firm of industrial consultants, thus ensuring for himself a future of telling his struggling clients how to mend their ways. We weren't sorry to lose him, as he used to enjoy pointing out other people's mistakes. He'll die young if he's not careful – and serve him right.

Anyhow, we settled down to reviewing our short list and soon found ourselves at loggerheads. Prinny wanted a man who wouldn't rock the boat. Number four's recent altercation with the men's shirts section, following his disclosure of their off-the-record 'arrangement' with the shirt factory for cut-price 'seconds', had had far-reaching repercussions. Strictly controlled activities, said Prinny warningly.

Scotty wanted a man sufficiently smart to come up with bright ideas for him to consider and sufficiently modest for the salesmen to bring him their problems of their own accord. His need, he urged, was aye for co-operation in areas which the salesmen would select. To my mind he was talking nonsense because all senior salesmen become obsessed with delusions of grandeur and their idea of co-operation is to do all the talking and none of the listening. Anyhow, Scotty's men suffer from delusions of adequacy.

My own schemes for far higher targets and a new philosophy I proposed to explain later, so I compromised for the moment by quoting as my objective an appropriate stanza on some of Satan's henchmen from Byron's Vision of Judgement:

'No station
Is theirs particularly in the rolls of hell assigned; but when their inclination
Or business carries them in search of game,
They may range freely . . . being damned the same.'

The last four words it was naturally expedient to omit in order to have the principle of uninhibited investigation accepted.

Operational Research in Business – I

London Graduate School of Business Studies

PART I. THE BACKGROUND

LORD KELVIN many years ago expounded his oft-quoted dictum, 'When you can measure what you are speaking of, and express it in numbers, you know that on which you are discoursing. But when you cannot measure it or express it in numbers, your knowledge is of a meagre and unsatisfactory kind'. Operational research is primarily concerned with measurement in management.

Until the second half of the last century most industrial and business organizations were small, employing only a handful of people. The enterprises were commonly both owned and managed by the same individual. When expansion took place, it was no longer possible for one man to perform all the necessary managerial functions. Consequently new functions grew up, such as production controller, personnel manager, sales manager and so on. Each of these functions evolved its own particular sphere and mode of operations and competence.

Slowly, it came to be realized that many problems could not be isolated into the individual compartments that were being set up in all large organizations, following the decentralization of separate functions. Although scientific developments were coming to the aid of the individual specialities created by this fragmentation, they were not coming to the aid of the overall executive function created thereby within the organization as a whole. As a result, it became imperative to have some system within the organization for coping with problems which spanned the various compartments, and this led to the development of operational research. For quite a long time, however, this kind of thinking was applied in limited areas where it had become crystal clear both that the problems existed, and also that they did not naturally fall within the competence of any one department. The coming of the Second World War demonstrated that the range and number of problems which fell into this category of specialization-spanning was larger than previously visualized. The lessons thus learnt in the Second World War were subsequently taken back, mainly through the redeployment of the personnel concerned, to various civilian businesses and industries. As a result, the scope of the subject increased rapidly after the end of the war, but it is worth noting that the growth has been very largely within the boundaries of manufacturing industry.

Definitions

The Council of the United Kingdom Operational Research Society defines operational research as 'the attack of modern science on complex problems arising in the direction and management of large systems of men, machines, materials and money in industry, business, Government and defence'. The Council go on to state that 'the distinctive approach is to develop a scientific model of the system, incorporating measurements of factors such as chance and risk, in order to predict and compare the outcomes of alternative decisions, strategies and controls. The purpose is to help management determine its policy and actions scientifically'. Note particularly the two phrases set in italics (by the present writer). A standard American textbook defines 'operations research'<sup>1</sup> as 'the application of scientific methods, techniques and tools to problems involving the operations of a system so as to provide those in control of the system with optimum solutions to the problems'.

Operational research is thus problem-oriented, envisaging that some model of the problem situation is formed and then used to estimate the practical effects of various alternative decisions which the manager might take to solve the problem. A cynic has indeed defined operational research as 'the art of winning wars without actually fighting'. There are, however, natural limitations governing the utility of what can be expected from such an approach. Operational research can only determine a best course to follow in so far as investigators succeed in identifying and defining all the relevant variables within a given problem situation. Even a seemingly simple situation may have to take account of a larger number of variables. Some will be outside the direct control of the immediate management and, as such, that much more difficult to pin down. Hence operational research is not trying to take away managerial judgement and to substitute a mathematical formula for it. What it aims to do is to sharpen and highlight the area of real decision. There is no more powerful apparatus for making decisions than the human brain. But there is no purpose in burdening it with decisions that can be delegated to a scientific system, albeit a system which is probably dependent to some extent upon mathematical formulas. Thus there is little point in using up a limited pool of 'judgement power' in choosing between one specific scheduling routine or another, or in gauging precisely when to replenish supplies of a particular item, when this judgement power is sorely needed to assess whether the whole scheduling problem is correctly formulated, or whether the entire purchasing arrangements should be changed.

Operational research looks across compartments and boundaries, and the mere act of doing this nearly always introduces some element of conflict into the problems concerned. Consider, for example, the well-known stock problem, or the inventory problem as it is referred to in the United States. The aim of any stock problem is, broadly Parts I and II, slightly abridged, of a paper presented to the Institute of Actuaries on March 20th. The paper will be concluded in next week's issue.

speaking, to reduce the total level of stocks held within an organization to a minimum. Stocks, in this context, should include not just the stocks of finished products, but also the stocks of raw material and of semi-finished products. (Note, too, that the stocks may be of cash rather than physical goods. The cash may then take different forms: in current account, in a short-term deposit account, in long-term investments, etc.). Various executives will look at these problems in different ways. Firstly, the production controller will always want to keep the stocks of raw material and semi-finished goods as high as possible in order to make sure that his machines are not kept idle through lack of material to work on. His concern with the stocks of finished goods is limited, although he may be interested in keeping the level of such stocks to an absolute minimum for the very understandable reason that the space required probably encroaches upon the space he would like to have for his own production purposes. Secondly, the sales manager constantly wants to be in the position of being able to meet an order from a customer immediately. If the level gets too low, he will be worried and claim that he cannot give his customers the service that is required. Hence he will press for as high a level of finished goods stock as possible. Thirdly, the finance controller will point out that all these stocks, of whatever kind, cost money and that higher levels of stocks require the raising of more working capital for the business. Hence the three men may well have different aims and objectives when looking at the stocking problem, and it is this kind of conflict which has to be resolved in attempting to formulate an optimum solution for a particular situation. Indeed, in tackling the problem contained in a given system, the operational researcher may try to optimize in any of the following ways:

- (a) minimize the input required for a specified output;
- (b) maximize the output from a specified input;
- (c) maximize some function of these two values, for example, the difference between input and output (profit), or their ratio (return on investment).

To carry out any such optimization it is important to define the area of operations for which the solution is to be optimum.

The possible dependence of the solution to a problem on the area of operations over which the optimization is carried out shows up a serious danger in any form of optimization problem. If only one small part of an organization is looked at and the optimum form of operation for that part found then, whilst this is truly optimum for that part in isolation, it is not necessarily optimum for the organization as a whole. Indeed, acceptance of the apparently optimum solution for one part may force other parts of the organization to adopt policies that lead to the overall solution being far from the ideal.

In attempting to formulate objectives, it has been tacitly assumed that the quantity to be optimized, which determines the effectiveness of the solution, is an obvious one and can be readily measured in numerical terms. But this is not always so or, what is commonly the situation, some parts of the system have an obvious quantification while other parts do not. For example, if more counter clerks are placed in a bank a better service is given to customers, in that the latter will then have a shorter average waiting time before being served. On the other hand, the assistants concerned will find that a smaller proportion of their time is gainfully employed. How, therefore, are the tangible costs of increasing the number of manned counters to be balanced against the less tangible benefits of reducing the queueing time of the customers? This kind of difficulty constantly appears and becomes even more marked, as mentioned below, when considering problems involving the social services or nationalized industries, such as transport and hospitals. Although strenuous efforts are being made to overcome these measurement problems by techniques such as cost/benefit analyses, it is likely that many operational research studies can only lead in the end to a statement of alternative courses of action, with appropriate costs and risks, leaving the manager concerned to exercise his judgement as between the various alternatives. But, as stated above, the proper use of the operational research approach is to reduce the area of hunch to an absolute minimum, thus showing where judgement is really needed and where it is unnecessary.

The systems analysis concept

The prime characteristic of operational research is that it deals with problems arising in the operating of systems. As already stated, the activity in one part of an organization generally has some effect on the activity of other parts. Hence, to evaluate any decision or action in an organization, it is necessary to identify all the significant interactions and to evaluate their combined impact on the performance of the organization as a whole, not merely on the part originally involved in raising the problem. Operational research, like Newton's law of gravity, aims to connect each part of a system to every other part.

This orientation is contrary to the natural inclination of many managers, who aim to cut a complex problem down in size and to isolate it as far as possible from its environment. Many aspects of a problem are commonly eliminated in this way, reducing it to one that can then be handled by standard techniques or by judgement based on experience. The systems orientation, on the other hand, moves in the opposite direction by deliberately expanding and complicating the statement of a problem until all the significantly interacting components are contained within it. Put another way, this approach aims to investigate, over the entire area under the manager's control, the implications of the proposed solution to a problem, not concentrating solely upon one particular region in the area of control. Such an inquiry would go to the full limits of the manager's responsibility, not neglecting the effects of policies made outside his area on the activity within his own area.

There are two main groups of operational systems, deterministic and probabilistic. For deterministic systems the interaction between the parts can be predicted without risk of error, if the facts or information which the system is required to handle are known. Thus, provided the machine capacities and staffing in a machine shop together with the programme of work is known, the kind and amount of work to be done each day together with the completion date for any given order can be fixed in such a way as to optimize the use of the plant. Similarly, a digital computer, although fast and complex, is a deterministic system in that the work it produces is precisely predictable, given the instructions and data fed into it (and assuming that there were both time and effort available to check the results by some non-computer means!).

Probabilistic systems, on the other hand, do not have the same preciseness about the predictions that can be made for the future. For example, the stocks held in a branch warehouse are depleted from time to time by amounts whose precise magnitude and interval of occurrence will not be precisely known in advance. The likely or probable future behaviour can, however, be forecast in many cases by analysing statistically what is known about past behaviour and current features of the system and then resorting to simulation.

The inter-disciplinary approach

Until the middle of the eighteenth century, virtually all studies referred to today as science were conducted under the name of 'natural philosophy'. The rate of increase of knowledge produced by the scientists then became so great that it was impossible for one man to store it all in his mind. Specialization then became inevitable and it showed up through the organization of separate scientific societies and university departments, many of whose origins can be traced to that period of history. This is precisely analogous to the split of function that was to occur within industry during the succeeding century. The subdivisions then made were, of course, artificial and not a natural phenomenon. Indeed, Karl Pearson, a distinguished father figure in statistics, fought a battle with the Royal Society over the fact that they would publish mathematical papers (in their series A) and biological papers (in their series B), but nowhere would they publish a paper which applied mathematics to biology! This led indirectly to the formation in 1901 of the journal Biometrika. Today the situation is even more complex. More and more subdivision has gone on until the point has been reached where many pressing problems can no longer be fruitfully treated by the individual specialist. For example, the study of communications involves physical, biological, psychological, sociological, engineering and economic aspects. Research by inter-disciplinary teams has thus become the only feasible alternative in many areas. Furthermore, in the early years of development of operational research during the last war, there was a great shortage of all kinds of scientists. Consequently, when it began to be seen that operational research could make a significant contribution to military activities, staff had to be acquired quickly without being able to define very precisely the job specifications, and mixed-disciplinary teams were formed out of sheer necessity. Out of this experience, however, came a recognition that the mixed team as such was valuable and necessity had become a virtue.

When any scientist is confronted by a new problem he tries to extract the essence of the problem and then decide whether he has previously faced a similarly structured problem in a different context, particularly from within his own field of specialization. Once he locates an analogous problem in his own special field, he looks to see whether or not the methods then used are applicable to the new problem with which he is faced. When scientists from different disciplines do this collectively, the pool of possible approaches to the problem grows.

For example, an electronics engineer examining the problem of production and inventory control for a particular product may quickly perceive that the fluctuations in inventory are a function of the length of time that elapses between changes in the market demand for the product and adjustment of the production level. In effect, he sees the problem as one of designing a servo-control system in which the relevant information concerning changes in the market demand is fed back quickly and accurately to the production control centre. At this centre, adjustments in production can be made in such a way as to minimize the appropriate cost function. He has in effect translated the problem into one of servo-theory, which he knows how to solve. On the other hand, a chemical engineer may look at the same problem and formulate it in terms of flow theory, and once this is done he then has his own methods available for solving it. Which of the alternative methods of approach is the most fruitful depends on the circumstances. The research team must examine the alternatives and select an appropriate approach, or develop a new and more satisfactory approach which may borrow ideas from several different background disciplines.

A further advantage from the team approach lies in the fact that most man-machine systems have physical, biological, psychological, sociological, economic and engineering aspects. Those in control of a system may be unaware of one or more of these aspects, and hence have an incomplete picture of their system. To see a system as a whole means not only to see all its components and their inter-relationships, but also the impact the particular system has on other aspects of the organization's operations. A mixed team increases the number of aspects of the system which can be examined in detail.

PART II. CLASSICAL LINES OF STUDY

Although operational research is of fairly recent origin, it is interesting to note that it has already gelled to the point where most of the textbooks that have emerged in recent years bear a surprising resemblance to each other. Courses on operational research bear the same familiarity. Although some of the details differ, most books and courses seem to start with a general introduction and then consider about eight technique-oriented areas. For example, one of the typical American textbooks has the following eight areas for discussion:

- (a) Stock or inventory control;
- (b) Replacement policies;
- (c) Queueing or waiting line problems;
- (d) Linear programming;
- (e) Competitive strategies;
- (f) Sequencing problems;
- (g) Critical path analysis;
- (h) Dynamic programming.

Most of these areas have been developed in a great deal of mathematical detail over the past twenty years or so. Indeed, the degree of sophistication that is inherent in some of them is now becoming extremely high, and there is a real danger in some areas that theory is outstripping the practical needs of business and its competence to apply the results. The time seems now to be ripe to look at the technique areas from the point of view of their utility and validity and the way in which problems can be formulated to make use of them, rather than to see the manner in which further advances can be made along strictly theoretical lines. In the following sections, attention is concentrated on this former aspect of the technique areas listed above, rather than on the techniques themselves.

Stock control

Most of the early models used in stock control were of a purely deterministic nature and solved the stock problem along mathematically deterministic lines. In recent times, probabilistic notions concerned with the costs of running out have been brought into the models and have made them more realistic. It has, however, become increasingly recognized in recent years that no stock control system will ever be highly efficient unless it is allied to some carefully thought out scheme of forecasting.

It is also worth assessing the sensitivity of stock control schemes. For example, the commonly quoted square-root rule to minimize total cost is:

$$D = \sqrt{\frac{2aQ}{k}}$$

where the sales volume is  $Q$  units per annum, the unit carrying cost is  $k$  per annum, the fixed cost per order placed is  $a$ , and  $D$  is the quantity to be ordered each time an order is placed. The costs per annum of stocking and ordering are:

$$\frac{Q}{D}a + \frac{1}{2}Dk \quad \dots (1)$$

Suppose that, in truth, the costs are  $a'$  and  $k'$  and not the  $a$  and  $k$  assumed above. Then the costs appropriate to (1) are now:

$$\frac{Q}{D'}a' + \frac{1}{2}D'k' \quad \dots (2)$$

whilst the true optimum costs are:

$$\frac{Q}{D'}a' + \frac{1}{2}D'k' \quad \dots (3)$$

$$D' = \sqrt{\frac{2a'Q}{k'}} \quad \dots (4)$$

The extra cost incurred by using the incorrect value of  $D$  is (2)–(3), or

$$\frac{Q}{D'}a' - \frac{Q}{D}a' + k'(D - D') \quad \dots (5)$$

Hence the extra cost, expressed as a proportion of the true optimum cost, is (5)/(3) and, after some simplification, this gives the expression:

$$\frac{1}{2}\sqrt{\frac{a'k}{ak'}} + \frac{1}{2}\sqrt{\frac{ak'}{a'k}} - 1 \quad \dots (6)$$

Hence if  $a'/a = \lambda$  and  $k'/k = \mu$ , the expression reads:

$$\frac{1}{2}\sqrt{\frac{\lambda}{\mu}} + \frac{1}{2}\sqrt{\frac{\lambda}{\mu}} - 1 \quad \dots (7)$$

The value of the expression (7), as a function of  $\lambda/\mu$ , is as follows:

$\frac{\lambda}{\mu}$	·25	·5	·75	1	1·5	2	2·5	3
(7)	·25	·06	·01	0	·02	·06	·11	·19

These specimen figures suggest that the results are relatively insensitive to small changes in  $a$  and  $k$ . In consequence the estimation of  $a$  and  $k$  to a high level of accuracy is not required.

Replacement policies

Two main types of replacement problems arise: first, with deteriorating items of equipment of high cost whose performance degenerates with use or the passing of time; secondly, where the items do not degenerate with the passing of time, but die or fail after a varying amount of use or time has elapsed. Items that deteriorate are likely to be large and costly, for example, machine tools, trucks and ships, generators and home appliances. Non-deteriorating items generally maintain a fairly level efficiency throughout their working lives, but then suddenly stop operating completely. These items tend to be small and relatively inexpensive: for example, light bulbs, vacuum tubes, tyre tubes, car springs, etc. In the case of the life-or-death items, the basic means of approach is really through the formulation of an appropriate life table. If this is done and the relative costs of replacing items either singly or in groups are known, a calculation can then be made as to the best moment of time at which to change items, again either singly or in groups. A similar kind of approach can be used to analyse problems of staffing and labour turnover in a large organization. Cases where this has been done include airlines and military organizations.

With deteriorating equipment of high cost, it is again possible to calculate the optimum time at which replacements can be made, given the various items of data that are essential. For example, given the initial costs, operating costs and possible re-sale costs, the average cost per annum can be calculated if the equipment is to be replaced after differing numbers of years. In addition, it is important to bring into the calculation two other factors, namely, interest on the capital that is being locked up and tax considerations due to the various allowances that can be obtained on new and re-sold equipment. Bringing these allowances and interest rates into the calculation can make, on the face of things, quite a difference. For example, in a recent problem, the optimum period for replacement of a particular piece of equipment varied as follows:

		Interest rate
		Zero	10 per cent
Ignoring tax allowance	..	12 years	15 years
With tax allowance	..	7 years	10 years

It is of some interest to note that the optimum period, namely ten years in this case, did not differ very much from the optimum period that one would obtain ignoring both the tax allowances and the interest rates. What is more, the cost to the company of making the wrong decision, that is, using twelve years as its replacement policy instead of ten years, is extremely small. In fact, once again the result is somewhat insensitive to small changes in the basic assumptions. Furthermore, there are the complications concerned here with being able to predict into the future the precise tax allowances that will be appropriate ten or twelve years hence, the costs of a new piece of equipment, the capabilities of a new piece of equipment, and so on. Some of the changes that could take place here may be even more frightening than small changes in the calculations just outlined. Hence it is suggested that the carrying through of an exercise such as this one in a great deal of detail may be introducing a certain element of spurious accuracy into the solution that is not really warranted. Indeed, what is required at any one stage is that the situation should be looked at afresh. Money spent in early years on equipment, or on its operational maintenance, is money that is sunk and cannot be reclaimed. At any point of time, however, it should be possible to make a calculation as to what is the optimum decision to make at that particular moment of time, given the likely course of future events. A consideration of replacement policies is thus not a static, once-for-all activity, but a continuing analysis that must constantly be updated.

Queueing problems

Queueing problems have proved to be an extremely fertile ground for the mathematically minded operational research worker and have provided a great deal of literature. There are a wealth of problems that can be looked at from a mathematical viewpoint as queueing systems are based upon probability distributions and there are a number of parameters that can be altered connected with the input, the waiting line discipline, the mode of service and number of channels, the service time distribution, etc. This has tended to hide the fact that many of the practical problems cannot be neatly slotted into the mathematical models that have been built, because of the lack of agreement between the theoretical distributions assumed in the models and those met with in practice. The consequence is that most queueing problems have to be solved in practice by some form of simulation, either by hand or on a computer. There are two aspects of such simulations that deserve discussion: first, the stability of the estimates that are obtained from them, and secondly, the optimal manner of planning such simulation experiments.

In any normal queueing model which commences operations from a defined state at time zero, there must be a transient phase before the model attains a steady state. This phenomenon is also true of simulations. When a queueing process is simulated (or, to be more precise, when a model of a queueing process is evaluated by means of simulation) initial values for the various parameters in the system have to be assumed: for example, the number of customers present in each queue and, if there is more than one queue, how much of their service time remains (assuming this is not of the negative exponential form when such an assumption is not needed) and so on. These initial conditions inevitably have an effect upon the earlier results produced by the simulation. One way to assess the effects is for the computer to make estimates of selected key parameters in the system at intervals. Thus the probability of zero queueing time based on the proportion of customers who do not queue at all in successive groups of fifty could be calculated. Some statistical test such as the Smirnov-Kolmogorov test, aimed at detecting trends in the parameter concerned, is then carried out. When the test shows that the parameters are no longer subject to trends, it discards all earlier results and continues to simulate for a further predetermined period. This latter stage is taken to be the true simulation. A second and rather more simplified method is for the computer to print out estimates of selected parameters at intervals, so that at the conclusion of each run the successive values can be plotted and those which appear to have been obtained during a transient phase discarded.

The optimum way in which to plan simulation experiments for queueing situations depends upon the nature of the problem concerned. There are basically two main types of problem: those which involve comparison between two or more different queueing systems under defined conditions, and those where estimates of specified parameters in a given queueing situation are required. From the simulation point of view, they are rather different problems, and to see why this is so consider the problem of output distortion. A simulation is, in effect, a transfer device. It takes certain inputs such as descriptions of service-time distributions, arrival patterns, etc., and converts these into outputs such as waiting-time distributions or proportions of rejected customers. The real life process of which the simulation is a model is also a transfer device which operates on qualitatively similar inputs to produce similar outputs. The simulation outputs may differ from the real outputs in two principal ways: bias and variability. The outputs from the simulation may accordingly be distorted and although the causes are many, the two most important are: (a) oversimplification in the model, and (b) poor random number generation producing high variability.

The first type of distortion can occur because of bad workmanship on the part of the operational analyst, but it may be deliberate, in that bias is not always worth the cost of getting rid of it. The second type of distortion can be brought under control to some extent and a considerable amount of work has been devoted to so-called variance reduction techniques.

In an experiment that is directed to comparing two possible queueing systems, the inputs will be the same except for the alternatives that are under examination. The outputs provide the measures of effectiveness and it may well be that the simulation model will produce some distortion in these outputs. But the important question to be answered is whether the amounts of bias are the same in the two series of runs that are necessary. If they are, then the existence of bias may be of little importance in comparing the two systems because it can be eliminated by judicious choice of method of comparison. If biases exist which are themselves determined by the nature of the alternatives, it may be very difficult to remove them or even to detect them. In most simulation models of queueing processes that have been constructed with reasonable care, correlated biases are unlikely to occur. As a rule, it is judicious to assume that biases are constant either as additive or multiplicative factors. If this is so, they do not matter very much. Their presence will not lead to the making of wrong decisions.

Against this type of problem may be set problems which are aimed at the estimation of some quantity or parameter. Here it is most essential that the queueing model used to convert the necessary input data into output data should be unbiased. There is no way of discounting the bias by allowing for it as in a comparative type of problem; it is not a question of saying which one is best of a number of choices, but of deciding by how much. Simulations intended to answer questions of this type must be constructed with great care and be thoroughly tested in known conditions, or against well-tried mathematical models, to ensure that whatever bias is present can be eliminated from outputs. This difficulty has not yet received a great deal of attention.

Linear programming

Programming is concerned with the determination of the optimum allocation of resources in complex situations. Basically it is a mathematical method which lays out the computations required in such optimum decisions so that any limitations imposed by side conditions involving inequalities are not violated. For example, in a transportation routing problem there may be limitations on the size and cargo-carrying capacity of the lorries, trains or ships to be routed. Furthermore, there will be a side condition inferring that it is not possible to ship a negative amount from one place to another. In almost all cases the method of computation that is used for such a problem is an iterative procedure, that is a systematic trial-and-error procedure which usually involves at least the first two of the following devices:

- (a) There will be a mathematical rule which determines after each step exactly what the next step is to be, on the basis of the results of the step just completed. One result of this feature is that it makes electronic computation possible.
- (b) The method will have been constructed in such a way that it guarantees that each trial will yield values which are closer to the correct answer than the preceding ones.

- (c) For a large class of problems there will be available trial-and-error procedure rules which are guaranteed to yield precisely the correct result after a finite number of steps. In other cases where this is not possible, one can hope to calculate a maximum error and to be able to say, for example, that the result of the most recent trial is at most one-tenth of 1 per cent away from the correct answer.

With every linear programming maximization problem it has proved useful to associate a closely related minimization problem and vice versa. Such pairs of problems are called 'dual' linear programming problems. The analysis of dual programming problems has attracted a great deal of attention among both economists and mathematicians for a number of reasons:

- (a) duality yields a number of powerful theorems which add to the understanding of linear programming;
- (b) duality is helpful in the solution of many programming problems, in that it is frequently easier to solve the associated dual problem than the original problem;
- (c) the dual problem turns out to have an extremely illuminating economic interpretation.

To illustrate point (c), consider a situation where the prime problem is a standard prediction one, namely, the problem of determining the profit-maximizing output levels for the various products of a firm, subject to a number of scarce input (capacity) limitations. Costs of the company's fixed inputs,  $C_1, C_2, \dots$  may not enter directly into its accounting profit calculations particularly if the warehouses, factories and other facilities which these symbols represent have been completely paid for using the usual accounting conventions. Nevertheless, it must be recognized that without these inputs the firm could not have earned its profits. Suppose then that the business man in question decides to determine what portion of the profit on each of his products he owes to each of the inputs. In the economist's jargon he will undertake to impute all of the company's profits to its scarce resources. For this purpose he will seek to calculate the artificial accounting price or value ( $V$ ) for each of his inputs and to choose a magnitude for each  $V$  such that the sum of these computed values of the scarce inputs going into any of his products is high enough to account for his profits on that product. That is, the  $V$  values should be chosen so that, if possible, the net profit from the appropriate product, and the net profit from each other company product, would be zero if each scarce input ( $C_i$ ) were to cost  $V$  per unit. It must be emphasized that the zero profit condition in this problem is not directly related to the zero profit requirement for long-term equilibrium under perfect competition. It is an accounting requirement, and if accounts values ( $V$ ) are proposed which do not impute profits completely to the scarce inputs, these accounting values must be raised until the unimputed residue has been eliminated.

There is another related aspect which has attracted considerable attention. The dual accounting prices ( $V_i$ ) can serve as a device for steering decentralized decision-making along an optimal course. Consider, for example, a firm with a large number of plants each of which makes some use of overall company resources. If Plant A uses more of the company's central warehouse space, less will be available to Plant B, and vice versa. Top management can, of course, allocate its bottleneck resources among the various plants by making a master plan and deciding plant by plant, input by input, how much should be where. This is the method of direct centralized planning and decision-making. Duality theory, however, points to an alternative approach. Suppose management is in a position to calculate values of the dual accounting prices  $V_i$  by an ordinary programming computation. They are then in a position to say to all plant directors that they can have as much of every input as they want, but that for every unit of input that they employ the company will debit them with the dual value of the item. Thus, if the plant directors are effective profit-makers, they can be left to decide by themselves which items should be included in the product line, for commodities which are not optimal from the point of view of the company will cause the company to incur a loss. The perfect plant manager will just break even because the dual accounting prices are calculated so as to use up all profits. They will cause no loss only if his product line decisions are optimal. Thus dual pricing can, at least in principle, serve as a substitute for centralized control and point the way to efficient decentralized decision-making.

The foregoing analysis, and indeed all linear programming problems, tacitly assume that the functions involved are strictly linear. Although this may well be true for a certain range of problems, for example, transportation problems, this is not likely to be true for the vast range of economic problems. Hence it is necessary to consider how far the use of linear programming techniques in such situations is likely to mislead. No detailed and systematic study of this problem has been published as far as is known, but there is a great deal of unpublished work (particularly by W. J. Baumol of Princeton) in which it is shown that the linear programming solution to many practical problems has often given poorer results than some, more or less randomly selected, initial allocation. It seems to be true that even if the non-linearity of the problem is extremely slight and is accounted for by a quadratic relationship, the error that can be made by following linear programming instead of the more correct quadratic programming may be substantial. This seems to be linked with the fact that linear programming methods must always end at one of the vertices of the allowable space defined by the constraints on the variables concerned, whereas the optimum point in a non-linear case may well be within the space rather than on one of its edges. Furthermore, it is quite possible that the linear programming approach will not necessarily end at even the best vertex of those that are allowable in such circumstances. Hence great care is necessary in ensuring validity before applying linear programming to economic situations.

Competitive models

The models which have been discussed so far have dealt with conflicts of interest internal to the organization, such as the conflict between various interests in the minimization of the sum of manufacturing costs and the capital investments in stocks of raw materials and partially finished goods held. Other models have been devised which are more concerned with conflict external to the organization, or at least that form of external conflict characterized as competitive. Competition manifests itself in the problems to be considered because the effectiveness of the decisions made by one party depend upon the concurrent decision made by another party. Such competition problems are commonly divided into two types – games and bidding.

The theory of games is a method of analysing a conflict in a situation in which there are two or more sets of opposing interests. It may be regarded as a game between a number of players, each of whom represents one set of interests. Each player has a finite set of strategies from which he will, on any given play of the game, choose one. The total assets of all the players combined are the same at the end of any one play of the game as at the beginning. It is assumed that each player wishes to pursue a conservative plan which will maximize his average gains. These maximum average gains, called the value of the game, may be calculated. Each player can, through appropriate play, be sure that he will receive the value of the game, provided that he chooses his strategy properly. Various methods exist for deciding upon the strategy which should be chosen. There are some corollaries to this, in that the player may have to conceal from his opponent his choice of strategy in any particular play, but it is a consequence of the theory that, if his opponent detects his long-term policy, the opponent can still do no better. In general, games are divided into two broad categories. Zero-sum games are those where total payments to the players concerned at the end of a play add up to zero. Non-zero-sum games are those such that the total payments at the end of the game need not necessarily add up to zero. Such games may represent economic situations where the end result of two companies bidding against one another need not result in one company's gain being exactly equal to the other company's loss. This would happen if the basic costs within the two firms were different. The other broad category of games is according to the number of persons taking part. Virtually all the developed theory which has been published is concerned with only two persons, but it is inherently possible to have the concept of an  $n$ -person game.

A considerable body of theory has been built up in the field of two-person games. There are, however, few published applications of the theory of games outside the military sphere. Although several writers have hinted at industrial situations where the theory has been successfully applied, most papers do not in fact give sufficient detail to be able to follow the precise sequence of steps that have occurred.

Bidding procedures for the rights to property, or for the opportunity to render services, are a relatively pure type of competition. Opposing parties bid for rights or opportunities under rules established by the Government or by the party who puts the rights or opportunities up for bidding. Most businesses are involved in bidding in one form or another, such as bidding for contracts or concessions, etc. This aspect of competitive behaviour has been given very little attention in the literature, possibly because once again details of the successful applications of operational research to the development of bidding strategies cannot be made public for reasons of industrial security. Consequently, any discussion of such strategies must either be abstract or must conceal the real problem by paraphrasing it.

There are two main kinds of competitive bidding, in both of which two or more bidders submit independent bids for the rights to property or to render service. In the first and most common case, only one bid per competitor is allowed and the adjudicator accepts the highest or lowest bid as dictated by the rules. The second type of bidding is the auction, or open bidding, in which two or more bidders continue to bid openly for an item of value until nobody is willing to increase the bid. The final bid is then the winner. Sometimes an intermediate kind of bidding occurs where bids are disclosed as they are received, so that subsequent bidders have the knowledge of previous bids. Some of the simpler bidding problems can be solved by game theory techniques. Situations where the number of bidders is large, and may indeed be unknown, cannot as yet be handled in this manner. Such situations can but be attacked by direct analytic methods and some of the simpler bidding problems are indeed more easily handled by such methods than by the matrix approach of game theory.

Most published work on bidding concentrates on the mark-up that a company should add to its estimated costs to reach the bid price. Simmonds, in an unpublished London University Ph.D. thesis (1965), discusses in some detail the analysis of the steps to be taken leading up to the decision as to whether or not to submit a bid for a given contract. He divides the procedure into three stages:

- (i) measuring the availability of capacity for the contract;
- (ii) forecasting profitability;
- (iii) comparison with other opportunities.

These factors are then put together using loss functions and a probability model based upon expected gains.

An alternative approach that has been put forward proceeds by first determining three quantities:

- (a) the marginal profit contribution of the contract under consideration, assuming the award is won;
- (b) the marginal loss penalty incurred if the award is lost;
- (c) the probability of being the successful bidder with a given price and in a specified environment.

The most profitable trade-off amongst these three elements is then formulated as determining a bid price to maximize the profit expectation from the contract, with the profit expectation taken as the marginal profit contribution multiplied by the success probability less the marginal loss penalty multiplied by the failure probability. Clearly the quality of the input information is the ultimate determinant of the usefulness of the results. In this particular case it is likely that the probabilities required under (c) above may be difficult to obtain, because the information traditionally collected and processed by the accounting system is not geared to be of assistance in this area, and recourse must be had to other sources. Provided, however, that management understands these limitations the model can be of assistance.

Sequencing and scheduling

In industry a common problem is how best to order the performance of the various tasks which make up some complex process. The ordering must be chosen with due consideration of technological feasibility (e.g. a component cannot be chrome plated before it has been cast) and plant limitations (e.g. the number of machines) in order to optimize with respect to some chosen criterion (e.g. to minimize production time per piece). The sledge-hammer approach is to write down all conceivable sequences, methodically delete those sequences which violate the rule of technological feasibility, and then evaluate all remaining sequences, perhaps using conventional visual aids like Gantt charts. While this procedure works for very small problems it becomes hopelessly laborious for large numbers of machines and large numbers of constituent tasks.

Complexity with this sort of problem increases so rapidly with size that attempts to find an efficient general solution procedure have been seriously restricted. In certain special cases, however, encouraging progress has been made. For example, one special case which has received a great deal of attention is the 'travelling salesman' problem, where it is desired to find an efficient general method, or algorithm which will enable the salesman to select the shortest route which includes all the given destinations from the vast number of possible routes. (The problem arises in a number of situations, most of which have little apparent relation to the activities of salesmen.) One interesting algorithm of this nature is given by Little, Murty, Sweeney and Karel in Operational Research (1963, pp. 972-989). They find the optimal route by a series of iterations of the 'branch and bound' type, performed on a high-speed computer. The aim of the procedure is to pick out the optimal route from the set of all routes by choosing a sub-set of routes which is thought likely to contain the optimal route. A further sub-set is then chosen from that sub-set with the same aim in mind, and so on, testing at each step to see if it is still possible for the optimal route to lie in the latest sub-set chosen. This process may be thought of as a tree whose branches bifurcate at various intervals. The trunk of the tree is the set of all routes, and forks into two branches which are sub-sets of this set, and so on, until the uppermost twigs are individual routes (i.e. sets with one member). Now, because of the structure of the travelling salesman problem, it is possible to calculate a lower bound on the mileage of all routes contained in either branch of the first forking pair, without actually enumerating all routes belonging to that branch. The branch whose lower bound is smaller is chosen and then climbed up to the next bifurcation. The lower bounds for each of the two branches then confronted are calculated, and climbing proceeds up the branch whose bound is smaller unless its bound is higher than the bound calculated for the branch rejected at the first bifurcation - in which case a return is made to that branch and the process proceeds from there. It can be shown that eventually this procedure will lead to one of the outermost twigs (a single route) whose mileage is less than each of the lower bounds calculated for branches already rejected on the way to the twig. It therefore follows that this route has minimal mileage.

The performance of computational algorithms like this one is exceedingly variable, in the sense that their speed of solution depends to a great extent on the particular parameters of the problem. They do not guarantee that a solution will be found without a great number of fruitless false starts, and they can really only be evaluated by applying them to large numbers of test cases. The branch-and-bound algorithm seems to have been very successful in cases involving up to forty points or cities, and represents a significant advance on previous techniques.

Critical path analysis

Critical path, or network, analysis is a technique for the planning of work. It reduces the examination of a large project to three stages:

- (a) breaking down the project into a set of individual jobs or events and arranging them into a logical network;
- (b) estimating the duration of each job and drawing up a schedule and finding which jobs control the completion of the project;

- (c) re-allocating money or other resources to improve the schedule.

The use of such techniques has become more or less standard in the U.S.A., particularly for defence contracts. The showpiece has been the use of them in the control of the construction of the Polaris missile system. Varying claims have been made about the extent to which the completion date was advanced by such techniques. These claims range from eighteen months to three years but are, of course, impossible to substantiate. It is, however, clear that the five-year time-scale of the Polaris programme, when put alongside the customary six- to eight-year time spans which characterize other weapon systems, did require some form of explanation, and it seems to be common ground that the compression of the time-scale could not have been achieved without network analysis. The methods have come to be used in a variety of ways in this country; for building projects, for planning promotion campaigns, for the organization of office moves, etc.

There is now available a fairly substantial literature on network analysis and the methods by which it can be applied. The technique itself is still young and is growing rapidly. In particular, methods are being developed for the better methods of allocation of limited resources, for the better estimation of job durations, for statistical bases for dealing with the distribution of possible job durations, and for the concept of sub-critical paths. In addition, the range of computer routines available for compiling networks is being considerably extended, with the result that the techniques can be more readily applied. There are also many possible future extensions of applications for networks. The use of such networks to control the installation of data-processing systems is already a well-established practice, but a fresh departure lies in studying the actual operation of computer-gear procedures, especially when integrated data processing is employed. For this an information flow chart is drawn up in the form of an arrow diagram, the tasks falling into three main groups:

- (a) the measurement and recording of the data;
- (b) the transmission of the messages;
- (c) the operation of the computer.

The critical path is calculated from estimates of the durations of these tasks and will show where greater speed would shorten the whole operation. This would suggest answers to questions such as the points at which reserve machines should be available to guard against breakdowns, or where it would pay to telephone the contents of certain forms ahead of the forms themselves, or whether there were any areas where it would be better to substitute faster methods of passing information.

Such questions as those just described raise some interesting side issues. For example, the time taken to transport physically a pack of punched cards is basically independent of the size of the pack, but the duration of a tabulation derived from the same cards is approximately proportional to the number of cards. The implication is that the critical path of operations could change according to the amount of information being processed. In a punched-card installation with an increasing load, the point at which a particular machine would become critical could be calculated in advance by network analysis. If an approach such as this is adopted, it can be used to help speed up the preparation of end-of-month accounts, statistical returns, etc. One recent British Prime Minister has gone on record as stating that there are difficulties in attempting to control the economy using out-of-date statistics. In such areas the application of these ideas should be able to give some assistance.

Dynamic programming

Linear programming was concerned with the question of making an optimum decision as to the allocation of a set of resources. Dynamic programming deals with the situation where time is involved and a sequence of decisions is required. As an illustration of the technique, consider a company which has a sum of money,  $A_0$ , available as a return on some investment at the beginning of year 1. It can use all this money to pay out dividends, or it can use part of it for dividends and part for re-investment. Assume that the company, which pays its dividends once a year, pays out  $x_0$  as dividend in the first year. The remainder of the money, namely,  $A_0 - x_0$ , could be used for expansion of the company's facilities. During year 1 the company is assumed to earn an amount  $A_0$  again on its original assets and this is available at the end of the year, but it will also earn a return on the amount  $A_0 - x_0$  which it re-invested. This procedure can then be followed through for the second and succeeding years. The average return on re-invested money is assumed to diminish as the size of the re-investment increases. Now if the company's objective is to maximize its dividend pay-out for a one-year period, then it should clearly pay out the complete sum  $A_0$  at the beginning. If, on the other hand, the company wishes to maximize the dividend pay-out over a two-year period, then the policy that it should follow is not necessarily the same and must depend upon the rate of interest which it expects to be able to earn on the amounts re-invested. Furthermore, if it is required to maximize the total pay-out over a three-year period, then the answer will be different once again. This is an illustration of a dynamic programming situation, in that a sequence of decisions is required, namely, how much to retain and how much to pay out each year, and these decisions can be computed once the basic information is defined. The set-up of the problem also illustrates the necessity to be able to define fairly closely the particular objectives that one has in view in solving the situation. Of course, looking at it from the shareholder's point of view, there is also the consideration as to the amount he himself could earn with the dividends if they were paid out to him. Thus, if the firm is only able to earn a return on any re-invested money at a rate near to or lower than that which the individual investor could obtain elsewhere, the latter will probably wish to see the maximum possible dividend pay-out year by year. On the other hand, if the rate of return within the company is substantially higher, then he would have a greater interest in wanting to maximize the pay-out over a longer period. Hence the individual situation needs to be defined fairly carefully to reach any precise conclusion. (To be concluded.)

Betterment Levy - IV

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

AT the end of the previous article (page 406, ante) reference was made to what is comprised in a 'project of material development', and it was pointed out that this phrase includes all the operations which are to be, or have been, carried out on the land, including development which is not material development and all operations in the course of clearing the land (section 65 (1)).

Nevertheless, section 65 (2) provides that where a notice of intention to carry out a project of material development has been served on the Commission under section 38 (which will be referred to later), and no counter-notice under section 39 (2) rejecting the notice has been served by the Commission on the would-be developer (because the notice does not specify the planning permission in accordance with which the project will be carried out, and the Commission are not satisfied that planning permission authorizing the project will be granted before the commencing date of the project, then

- (a) no land which does not form part of the land specified in the notice under section 38 will be treated as land comprised in the project of material development; and

- (b) no development which does not fall within the nature and scope of the project of material development will be treated as development comprised in the project.

Where the project of material development includes the erection of one or more buildings, the land comprised in the project will be treated as including the site of any garage, outbuilding, garden, yard, court or other appurtenance which is to be constructed for occupation along with the buildings, if not otherwise comprised in the project. And where a project of material development consists of a change of user of the whole or part of a hereditament, the land comprised in the project will be that hereditament. 'Hereditament' means the aggregate of the land which at the relevant date forms the subject of a single entry in the valuation list for a rating area.

Additional development

A project of material development, once defined and isolated as above described, may be varied as it proceeds. If the variation amounts to the carrying out of additional development which extends on to other land, the project on the other land, together with so much of it as relates to the original land will be treated as a separate project of material development (section 66 (1) and (2)). In any other case the additional development will not be treated as a project of material development unless either:

- (a) a notice of intention to carry out the additional development as constituting a separate project of material development, is served on the Commission under section 38; or
- (b) the Commission serve on the developer or other person entitled to an interest in the land or part of the land comprised in the project, a notice stating that the additional development appears to them to be so substantial as to constitute a separate project of material development (section 66 (3)).

Where notice of intention to carry out additional development is served on the Commission under section 66 (3) (a) the additional development will be treated as constituting a separate project of material development. But where notice is served by the Commission on the developer or other person under section 66 (3) (b):

- (a) the additional development will be treated as constituting a separate project of material development unless, on an objection to a notice of assessment of levy served in respect of it, it is agreed by the Commission or determined by the Lands Tribunal that it ought not to be treated as a separate project; but
- (b) no person will be treated as having contravened section 38 by reason only that no notice of intention to carry out the additional development was served under that section.

Where it appears to the Commission that a project of material development has been begun in such circumstances as to contravene section 38, the Commission may serve a notice under section 68 on any such person indicating the circumstances in which section 38 has been contravened. Where a project of material development has been begun without the service of a notice under section 38, but a notice in respect of it has been served by the Commission under section 66 (3) (b) or section 68 then, in determining for the purposes of section 65 what development is to be carried out in pursuance of the project after that time, regard is to be had in particular to:

- (a) the nature and scope of the project as indicated by the development so far as it has proceeded up to that time, on the assumption that the development will be completed in accordance with the way in which it has been begun; and
- (b) any planning permission for the time being in force which authorizes any such development to be carried out.

Assessable interests

Levy under Case C is chargeable in respect of an 'assessable interest' in land comprised in a project of material development (the relevant land) or part of it; and where payable in respect of two or more assessable interests is to be charged separately in respect of each of them (section 31 (1)). An interest in the relevant land is an 'assessable interest' if:

- (a) it subsists at the date when the project is begun; and
- (b) it is either the fee simple in the relevant land or a tenancy of the land other than a 'minor tenancy', that is to say, a tenancy for a year, or from year to year or any lesser interest; and
- (c) it is not a reversion to a tenancy which has more than ninety-eight years to run at the date on which the project is begun.

Accordingly, a freeholder who grants a ninety-nine years' lease for building purposes will escape liability for levy if his lessee carries out a project of material development which he begins during the first year of the ninety-nine-year term. But it will be otherwise if the term of the lease is ninety-eight years or any less period, unless there is no leviable development value in the reversion.

An agreement to grant a tenancy will be treated as if it were the grant of the tenancy itself, provided that the agreement is an enforceable agreement under which the prospective tenant has been, or can be, required to take the tenancy and the agreement is either unconditional or not conditional upon the carrying out of the project (section 65 (2) and (3)). But the tenancy of part (but not the whole) of the relevant land will not be an assessable interest if the interest or one of the interests by virtue of which a person is the developing owner is the reversioner on the termination of the tenancy (section 32 (4)).

For the purpose of assessing levy in respect of two or more assessable interests by virtue of which a person is the 'developing owner' (below) in relation to a project, the Commission and the developing owner may enter into an agreement whereby those interests will be treated as if they had merged into one interest immediately before the project was begun, in which event section 31 (2) and (3), infra, relating to the computation of the levy, will apply subject to such modifications as the agreement may provide.

'Developing owner' means any person who, in respect of every part of the land comprised in the project, when it is begun, either:

- (a) is entitled to an assessable interest in the land; or
- (b) is under an enforceable contract to purchase such an interest or, being an authority possessing compulsory powers, has served a notice to treat for the compulsory acquisition of such an interest; or
- (c) is under contract to take a tenancy other than a minor tenancy (section 32 (5)).

A person may fulfil one of the above conditions in respect of one part of the land and another of the conditions in respect of a different part of the land.

Where two or more persons would each be the developing owner under section 32 (5) the one who, as against the other or others of them, is entitled to possession of the part of the land on which the first 'specified operation' (within section 64 (3)) is carried out will be treated as the developing owner. The developing owner is the person liable to pay the levy in respect of every assessable interest in the relevant land or part of the land; but if no person is the developing owner within section 32 (5), then any person entitled to an assessable interest in the land will be liable to pay the levy in respect of that interest (section 36 (4)).

Where a notice of intention to carry out a project, specifying the land to which it relates, has been served on the Commission under section 38, the Commission may serve notice on any person appearing to them to be entitled to an interest in the land requiring him:

- (a) to inform the Commission whether his interest in the land is a tenancy, and if so, to state the name and address of his landlord or the person to whom he pays rent in respect of the tenancy; and
- (b) to inform the Commission whether his interest in the land is in reversion to one or more tenancies and, if so, to give particulars of those tenancies.

Calculating the levy

If the land on which the project of material development takes place is not let, the freehold will be the sole assessable interest. But if the land is let the interest of the occupying tenant, who will normally be the person carrying out the development, will be an assessable interest, as will also the interest of the owner of the reversion, whether freehold or leasehold, if the reversion is not more than ninety-eight years distant. In Case A an actual transaction takes place, the consideration for which provides the market value; but in Case C there is no such ready-made market value, and it is necessary to estimate the market value for the purpose of the development. Moreover, the development in Case C affects all interests in the land and not merely the interest of the developer.

Section 31 (2) and (3) provides that for the purpose of assessing levy in Case C the market value of the relevant interest, the base value of that interest, and any expenditure on improvements or ancillary rights are to be ascertained in accordance with Part III and V of Schedule 4 and such other provisions of the relevant schedules as are applicable. The market value of the relevant interest less the base value of that interest less the allowable expenditure on improvements or ancillary rights will then be the net development value of the relevant interest, as under Case A.

Full market rent

Under Case C the first step in arriving at market value is to determine what is the rent at which the relevant land might reasonably be expected to let in the open market at the date of commencement of the development. This rent is called 'the full market rent' (Schedule 4, paragraphs 16, 22). Although this procedure of finding the full market rent would not be a necessary approach in cases involving a freehold interest in possession, it considerably simplifies the calculation of levy in cases where more than one interest is involved.

Normally a ninety-nine-year lease is assumed in assessing the rent, but in a small minority of cases involving the development of a wasting asset a lesser period will be taken if the development will be completed in less than ninety-nine years (paragraph 17). The assumed ninety-nine-year or other lease is to be taken subject to any of the following incumbrances in so far as they would restrict the doing of anything not comprised in the project of material development, viz.:

- (a) an easement;
- (b) a restrictive right;
- (c) a covenant or agreement restrictive of the use or development of land which, having been made between a lessor and a lessee, forms part of the terms and conditions of a tenancy which is an assessable interest;
- (d) a mining lease.

Other incumbrances have also to be taken into account, such as rights belonging to statutory undertakers, contingent local land charges and rights of way.

It is to be assumed that no consideration other than rent will be given for the lease and that the terms and conditions of the lease would not require either the tenant or the landlord to carry out any material development of the relevant land on or after the date of commencement; but that the terms and conditions of the letting include a covenant on the part of the tenant to carry out the project of material development (paragraphs 18 to 20).

If planning permission for any development is in force at the date of commencement of the project, it is to be taken into account in calculating the rent; and any conditions whereby the permission subsists for a limited period or houses built by virtue of the planning permission are to be occupied only by persons employed in agriculture or forestry are to be ignored.

If planning permission for the development is not in force at the commencing date the rent is to be computed as if planning permission for the relevant project, but no other development, were then in force. But if at the date of commencement of the relevant project, and in pursuance of a planning permission in force at that date, other development has been begun before that date but not completed at that date and either:

- (a) the carrying out of that development was begun before April 6th, 1967; or
- (b) where it was begun on or after April 6th, 1967, notice of intention to carry out the development was served under section 38 before the commening date or notice in respect of the development was before the commencing date served under section 66 (3) (b) or section 68 then account is to be taken of that planning permission in calculating the rent (paragraph 21).

Market value

When the full market rent has been arrived at in accordance with the above-mentioned provisions, paragraphs 23 to 27 of Schedule 4 explain the way in which account is to be taken of it in estimating the market value of each assessable interest subsisting in the land being developed. Thus:

(a) where the assessable interest is a tenancy, other than a reversionary tenancy, the market value is the excess of the full market rent over the rent under the lease, capitalized for the period from the date of commencement of the project of development to the end of the tenancy;

(b) where the assessable interest is that of a reversionary tenant, the market value is the aggregate of any capitalized profit rent receivable until the expiry of the sub-tenancy plus the present value of the right to receive, from the end of the sub-tenancy until the end of the superior tenancy, the excess of the full market rent over the rent payable under the superior tenancy;

(c) where the assessable interest is the fee simple in possession, the market value is the full market rent capitalized in perpetuity which should correspond to the normal freehold market value;

(d) where the assessable interest is a freehold subject to a tenancy, the market value is the aggregate of the capital value of the rent receivable during the tenancy plus the present value of the right to receive the full market rent in perpetuity from the date of termination of the tenancy (paragraphs 23 to 27).

Courses and Conferences during 1967

THE highlight of 1967 for the accountancy profession will be the Ninth International Congress of Accountants which takes place in Paris from September 6th to 12th. As previously announced in The Accountant, the congress theme – 'The new horizons of accounting' – will be considered at general meetings from four aspects: economic, geographical, technical and scientific, and the task and training of the accountant of tomorrow. A considerable number of accountants from the United Kingdom will be attending and there will also be wide representation of accountants from countries throughout the world.

In addition to the congress technical sessions, an interesting programme of social events has been arranged. They include a congress reception at the Palais de Chaillot, a congress dinner, a gala concert in the Salle Paley, a ballet at the Opera-Comique, a dinner and concert aboard a bateau-mouche cruising on the Seine as well as many excursions to places of interest both in and out of Paris, including the Loire châteaux.

Once again a wide variety of courses and conferences has been arranged by the accountancy bodies in the United Kingdom, the principal ones being detailed below. Two conferences in fact commence this week-end: The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants is holding a residential conference at Harrogate, and at Oriel College, Oxford, there is a data processing course for members of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

April 7th–9th

THE INSTITUTE OF MUNICIPAL TREASURERS AND ACCOUNTANTS

A WEEK-END residential conference on the theme 'The structure and finance of the social services' is being held this week-end by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants at the Crown Hotel, Harrogate.

Five papers are being presented, including: 'Social benefits – the national structure and finance', by The Rt Hon. D. Houghton, C.H., M.P.; 'The social services – national and local', by Mr F. A. Adams, A.I.M.T.A., Accountant-General, Ministry of Health, and Mr L. Copplestone, B.A.(ADMIN.), County Treasurer, Salop, and 'Future trends in the social services – the economic consequences', by Mr J. L. Rampton, Under-Secretary, H.M. Treasury.

April 7th–9th

THE INSTITUTE OF COST AND WORKS ACCOUNTANTS
Data Processing Course at Oriel College, Oxford

'DATA processing for the small and medium-sized firm' is the theme of a week-end course for members of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants being held at Oriel College, Oxford.

Members attending will be given a survey of how the more sophisticated applications used for forecasting, planning and control in large firms can be applied to the problems of the small and medium-sized firm. Among the speakers will be: Mr C. H. Hunt, M.A., F.S.S., data processing research unit, Department of Computational and Statistical Science, University of Liverpool; Mr K. S. Williams, F.C.A., International Computers and Tabulators Ltd; and Mr R. H. Hill, F.C.W.A., F.C.C.S., M.I.O.M.(DIP.), chief accountant, Howard of Ilford Ltd.

April 14th-16th

THE INSTITUTE OF COST AND WORKS ACCOUNTANTS
Week-end Conference at Keele University

Quantifying Risk-yield

by D. C. BEATON, C.A.

A CARDINAL factor in comparing investments is the yield. This is usually expressed as a percentage ratio of dividend income to capital cost. In the yield is reflected the degree of risk in the investment; the greater the risk, the higher is the yield – and vice versa. Similarly, in appraising an investment proposal by calculating the present values of future cash flows, it is customary to use a rate of discount which reflects in its magnitude the degree of risk.

An analysis of this rate of discount seems to indicate three elements. First, there is the factor of time: a sum of money due a year hence is worth more than one of the same amount due two years hence. Secondly, there is the factor of risk: due to the speculative nature of a business – a risk greater than in a 'riskless' gilt-edged security – there is a degree of uncertainty in the amounts of future cash flows. Thirdly, there may be expected to be some favourable circumstances, such as above-average efficiency, which would produce above-average returns.

If, for example, a year hence an investment is expected to produce a dividend of 4 out of a profit of 6, and capital of 102 including 2 retained profit, the present value of the investment could be calculated in the following way. If the element of risk were 2 per cent, or to put it in another way, the degree of certainty were .98, the certain equivalent of the 106 (4+102) would be  $106 \times .98 = 103.88$ . If the riskless rate of interest on capital were 3 per cent, then the present value of the certain equivalent would be  $103.88 \times .9709$  (i.e.  $1 \div 1.03$ ) = 100.86. Of this sum, .86 would represent the present value of the favourable element.

Estimate of risk

One may well comment that this is all very well in theory, but how may one estimate the element of risk? An investor knows that he can obtain a riskless return on his money by investing in gilt-edged securities. When he decides to invest in a risky concern he does so in the hope and expectation of a higher-than-riskless return on his money. Although he hopes for more, he is running the risk that he may in the event receive a return of less than the riskless rate, or may even suffer a loss of some of his capital.

Business risks can broadly be classified by type, i.e. by industry or trade. In order to make a measurement of the risk in an industry or trade, it seems necessary to aggregate the collective experience of all the business concerns in the industry or trade. This, it is suggested, is a function which could be performed by a trade association or other organization representative of a particular trade or industry.

Arrangements could be made for all constituent businesses to make regular returns to their association of financial results and expectations. The association would consolidate the returns so as to produce aggregates for the whole industry. Aggregates of significance would be those of the capital values of the constituents at the beginning of the year, of the dividend distributions in respect of the year (A), and of the capital values at the end of the year (B).

In arriving at these aggregates the figures of some constituents would include profits which fell short of the 'minimum' riskless rate on capital; the figures of others might be after reduction for losses. In the case of those constituents whose results for the year (profit or loss) fell short of the minimum riskless rate on capital, the association would compute and aggregate the amounts of such deficiencies (C).

The risk rate for the year for the industry (X) could then be expressed as  $X : 1 = C : (A+B) + C$ . Alternatively the form of the expression could be the factor of certainty for the year, viz.  $X : 1 = (A+B) : (A+B) + C$ . As an illustration with figures, if A were £6 million, B £150 million and C £3,183,700, the factor of certainty would be .98, viz.  $.98 : 1 = (6 \text{ million} + 150 \text{ million}) : 156 \text{ million} + 3,183,700$ .

Trend of risk

Since those results of the constituents of an industry which were poor would no doubt fluctuate significantly from year to year, the figures of a single year would not be sufficient to measure the risk. By the use of suitable mathematical formulae, which might include moving averages, and with the aid of an actuary, the association could record the trend of risk, and project the trend into future years along the probable path. The association could regularly inform its constituent businesses of the expected certainty factors for approaching years, revising them at least every year.

The constituent businesses when making their calculations of discounted cash flows would then have available for use authoritative certainty factors in respect of future years; and when making calculations at successive yearly intervals would have fresh authoritative figures available for those calculations.

In recommending the 1966 dividend of 9½d a share, the board had the benefit of professional advice and consultation as to the interpretation of the governing law (section 77 of the Finance Act 1965) and Mr Sharpe says he believes the resulting substantial retention of profits at this time will be accepted as justified. But once the present heavy capital expenditure programme is completed, the board has no projects at present in mind 'that would enable such a large retention to be fairly claimed as necessary in the future'.

Looking at the current year, Mr Sharpe expects to see some recession from the high success of the past year. Com-

But, unfortunately, 'non-preferred' sizes in G.P.O. terms are very much preferred in the greeting card industry, particularly in the better quality productions. Dealing with this problem 'may involve some sacrifice of profit margins and, in the short term, of sales also'.

For a group of its size and standing in basically a printing and publishing industry, W. N. Sharpe issues rather drab-looking accounts, the old-style form of which our reprint shows. There is no extra matter in the form of a five- or ten-year record.

The directors, admittedly, are basically reporting to

1. TRADING SURPLUS

The Directors estimate that approximately £80,000 of the total Group pre-tax surplus is of an exceptional nature due to:

- (a) the Subsidiary's profits (consolidated for the first time) cover a fourteen months' period owing to a change in accounting date, which period includes two seasonal peaks, and
- (b) to the trading rhythm of both Parent and Subsidiary Companies having been accelerated bringing more profit into the present accounts than would have been applicable to a normal twelve months' sales.

The MINIPUTER invoicing machine. The complete invoicing process reduced to three simple stages. The MINIPUTER Unit is the fastest, simplest, most economical method of producing documents involving any form of calculation—in any combination or sequence and in any unit of quantity or currency.

This amazing little machine can turn a copy typist into a complete invoicing department

Electronically programmed invoicing. The Remington MINIPUTER Unit takes the average 25 steps in a normal invoicing operation—and cuts them down to three. Or five, if someone happens to make an error of quantity or price. It is completely automatic. The tiny, built-in computer does all the necessary mathematical calculations at the rate of 166 per second.

Any copy typist can be trained to use the MINIPUTER Unit in five minutes. The MINIPUTER Unit solves other kinds of calculating problems, too, for government, insurance and industrial users. Sounds interesting? Fill in the coupon.

I am interested in the Remington MINIPUTER Unit. Please send me further details and descriptive literature.

Better still, you should have a Burroughs 500 System ... whose powerful Master Control Programme would juggle priorities, schedule that rush job, and get it multi-processed immediately, along with the rest of the work in progress.

Long-term changes? Just as simple. Many jobs, for instance, can be added to a Burroughs 500 System which seems—by "one-job-at-a-time" standards—to be fully loaded. When a larger configuration is finally required, the MCP automatically adjusts your work to take full advantage of the added memory, input/output, or peripheral resources.

With a responsive Burroughs 500 System scheduling its own work, maintaining data and programme libraries, and achieving full utilisation through automatic self-management, you're free to concentrate on other important responsibilities. On managing people, for instance. Or perfecting your own brand of responsiveness to your company's constantly changing pattern of information needs.

So if you sometimes get the feeling you should be a magician instead of a DP Manager, remember: there's a better way than "Presto!" It's the new breed of self-managing computers—Burroughs 500 Systems.

There's a Burroughs system for every type of business.

minority holders, taking the close company point into account, but even so the accounts could profit from a livelier style of presentation and content.

Two points

TWO accounting points are mentioned in the statement by Mr Sidney Hill, the chairman, with the accounts of Britains Ltd, the fine papermakers. Methods and rates of depreciation on various classes of plant and machinery and other assets, he says, 'have been complex but have now been simplified without loss of conservatism. Any effect on the 1966 profit is not significant'. What the old basis was and what the new one is is not explained.

There is fuller information on a change in stock valuations. For administrative reasons the chairman says stocks of paper 'are now valued on a basis nearer cost. Profit has not been affected by the increase in value as at December 31st, 1966, which has been adjusted on stocks and added to general reserve'.

A note to the accounts states that the basis of valuation of 'work in progress stocks' has been revised following the introduction of newer accounting techniques. The amount added to general reserve as the increase due to revaluation is £57,109. The basis of valuation is the lower of cost or market value, and of work in progress is cost - including an appropriate addition for overheads.

CITY NOTES

THE last week before the Budget is invariably an uneasy stock-market period and with gains tax complications to be added there has been more than the customary jockeying for pre-Budget positions. Basically, however, the market undertone is relatively firm and there is confidence that the Budget is unlikely to hurt too much.

Corporation tax is the biggest Budget imponderable, and City ideas on the likelihood of a change in the rate of the tax have ebbed and flowed considerably over the past few weeks. The current guesswork is for the possibility of a higher rate of corporation tax allied to a reduction in the standard rate of income tax. Corporation tax at 42½ per cent and income tax at 8s in the £ would be a combination that industry and the equity market would both probably be prepared to accept without undue concern.

Meanwhile the move towards lower interest rates is keeping the fixed interest end of the market firm and the immediate post-Budget experience could well reinforce the upward trend in fixed interest stocks, possibly at the expense of equities where the present pitch of prices seems already to discount any potential and hard won improvement in industrial earnings.

THE difficulties of the Pinnock Finance group following those of a number of other deposit taking finance companies have inevitably directed attention to the shortcomings of the current regulations under the Protection of Depositors Act. The filing of accounts with the Board of Trade on time is not necessarily protection for depositors. The difficulties of the deposit companies have undoubtedly been increased by the snowball effect stemming from a succession of failures, and the Pinnock affair need not necessarily be the last of the deposit company difficulties. Allowing companies to advertize for deposits and then checking on their reliability seems, to many, to be a case of cart before horse. It is clear enough that such companies habitually borrowing short and lending long cannot withstand the effect of even a relatively modest pressure of withdrawal demand.

Operational Research

London Chartered Accountants' Eastbourne Course

AT the Grand Hotel, Eastbourne, last week, the London & District Society of Chartered Accountants made the audacious experiment of mounting a three-day course on 'Operational research - aspects of importance to accountants'. It was audacious because there was little evidence to show how much interest existed amongst accountants for the current O.K. subject of O.R., and the nearer that the Society got to opening day the clearer it became that it was a bit ahead of its membership as a whole.

So it was a somewhat select body of eighty who assembled at Eastbourne. The number included some chartered accountants from other district societies; some accountants from different stables; a barrister (filling the place of a member who was prevented from attending at the last moment); an American visitor from Belgium; and an observer from the Institute acting on behalf of the Courses Committee. From the point of view of the organizers the most heartening features were the high proportion of members of the course who were attending an Institute-sponsored course for the first time; the dominant number of members from industry and commerce; and the large number of younger members attending.

New approach

The organizing committee, under the chairmanship of Mr Christopher Bostock, M.A., F.C.A., had departed from precedent in a number of ways, but principally in the basic decision to delegate the whole direction of the course to a highly-qualified non-accountant in the person of Professor Peter Moore, of the London Graduate School of Business Studies. Professor Moore was asked to lay out the course, specify the content of each session, help to choose lecturers, and co-ordinate the whole undertaking. In the event the team of lecturers assembled included Professor F. G. Foster, of the London School of Economics; Dr B. Benjamin, director of Research and Intelligence for the Greater London Council; Dr D. J. Chambers, of the London Business School; Mr E. Jowett, O.R. Department, Steel Company of Wales; and two representatives from the consultancy wing of the profession - neither of them being accountants - Mr D. R. Kaye, of Messrs Arthur Andersen & Co, who had been co-opted on to the organizing committee and had entered into this work with as much enthusiasm as could have been expected from any accountant working diligently for his own profession, and Mr Fraser Morrison, of Messrs Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co.

The President of the Institute, Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., F.C.A., opened the course crisply and enthusiastically and, fifteen minutes later, Professor Moore had the members firmly in his grip. Dr Benjamin set the stage and highlighted the brief but dramatic history of O.R., from its indeterminate beginnings, through its well-documented 'military' period, to its current steady infiltration into all fields of decision-making. He stressed that O.R. was an analytical method of approaching problems, and was not to be confused with any or all of the techniques - mostly mathematical and often employing computers - which its exponents brought to bear upon problems with which they were faced.

Study of System

O.R. is the study of system by careful observation to determine how it fits together and thus how it can be made to work as efficiently as possible. It will often work by building a model of the system - in physical or, more likely, mathematical terms - and trying out on the model various ideas which may be expected to improve the efficiency of the system as a whole. Dr Benjamin pushed home his message by indicating the techniques used and also the areas in which O.R. has already been successfully used, not least in the medical and social fields with which he has been especially concerned.

Aiding the executive

On Thursday morning, Professor Moore started with a personal exposition of the O.R. approach, showing why, as businesses grew bigger, it became inevitable that science had to come to the aid of the executive function within business. He stressed the fact that O.R. was not the work of an individual within a business, but was by definition inter- or multi-disciplinary (a team exercise) and depended for its success on its ability to model real situations on paper, which may or may not be a computer print-out. He talked of different kinds of models, how they were constructed, manipulated, optimized, and finally used to implement changes in the system under study in the interests of increased efficiency and profitability. He quickly established for himself and his team of lecturers a reputation for talking academically of subjects which were new to his audience and demonstrating conclusively his practical experience in putting O.R. to work. He also made it plain that in two and a half days he was not going to do more than try to show the members something about the principles used by O.R. men in tackling the four types of problem commonly referred to as those of allocating resources, inventory, replacement and queueing.

A recent paper by Professor Moore on 'Operational research in business,' to which he made frequent reference during the course, is being reproduced in The Accountant; the first section appears elsewhere in this issue.

Throughout the rest of Thursday, all day on Friday, and on Saturday morning the course settled down to a routine of listening to a lecture, at the end of which a problem was set to be worked in study groups directly after the lecture, following which the speaker reviewed the work done in groups and extended his subject a little further. The problems were practical and served particularly to give beginners confidence in applying the simpler principles used by operational researchers to tame the variables of which all business problems are composed.

On Friday afternoon members had the choice of attending one or more voluntary sessions on special O.R. topics, or taking an hour or so off. Less than 10 per cent chose a rest, and the remainder spent an hour and a half discussing their views on critical path method, O.R. and computers, putting O.R. into practice or forecasting in O.R. This was a novel feature of the course, but it appeared that the time allowed was not really enough, since the ad hoc groups took quite a long time to settle down and forgot their inhibitions in free expression.

After rather more than twenty-four hours' work in two and a half days – and considerably more for those who stayed on talking in groups late into the night as accountants on courses seem to like to do – Professor Moore and Mr Bostock, separately and without prior consultation, summed up the course, the deficiencies it had showed up in the basic numeracy and knowledge of elementary statistics amongst accountants, and the challenge that O.R. presented to the accounting profession if it was to be able to supply members to work in O.R. teams and ensure that the basic data upon which the O.R. men will work is both sound and what they want. Mr Bostock – who perhaps felt more able to be blunt with his professional colleagues than did Professor Moore speaking from outside – urged the profession not only to revive its mathematics (provided there was anything to revive) and to learn the statistics it had never encountered, but also to welcome rather than discredit the short cuts such as readiness to use data of indifferent quality (if it was the best available), and the building of probability into financial assessment which the O.R. men had pioneered but which could so easily be refined and improved by accountants.

There was a great deal of evidence that the course was enjoyed by those attending and that it served to shock most of them into a realization that O.R. had arrived and had a real message for the accounting profession – a message which reads 'understand and espouse, or run the risk of being put in the shade by'. It was perhaps a pity that less than half the number of people who could have attended applied to do so, but the gain should be theirs.

Annual General Meeting

THE annual general meeting of members of The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland was held at Chartered Accountants' Hall, 218 St Vincent Street, Glasgow, on Friday of last week, with Mr E. Birnie Reid, O.B.E., T.D., D.L., President of the Institute, in the chair.

The accounts of the Institute for 1966 and the annual report of the Council for 1966–67 were adopted. (Extracts from the report were reproduced in The Accountant of March 25th.)

PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS

In the course of his presidential address Mr Birnie Reid said:

It would I think be fitting that at this stage in our proceedings we should call to mind the debt which the Institute owes to Mr Thomas Lister, whose death on February 26th we all so greatly deplore. His services to the accountancy profession through a long period of years were legion, and he never spared himself in giving of his best to the Institute to which he was so deeply devoted. Among his many invaluable contributions to our activities were his presidency of the Institute for the year 1959–60 and his convenership from 1953 to 1960 of the Special Committee on Examination and Training of Apprentices. He carried out both these heavy tasks with distinction: his committee's Report on Examination and Training was a notable landmark in our history, leading as it did to the arrangements with the Scottish universities for apprentices to take the prescribed classes in law, economics and accountancy on a whole-time basis during a single academic year in the course of their apprenticeships. Tom Lister never hesitated to respond to any call on his services made by the Institute, and we shall greatly miss the ripe experience and sound judgement that was so cheerfully placed at our disposal.

Since we have a special general meeting to follow immediately upon the conclusion of this annual general meeting, my presidential address had best be brief. The annual report is in your hands; I hope you have read it; and I therefore intend to limit myself to 'stop press news'.

Dewar Committee's Report

On the question of education and training of apprentices, the annual report summarizes the main features of the recommendations of the Special Committee, under the convenership of Mr G. D. H. Dewar. It also refers to the arrangements which were made for meetings of members to be held in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dundee, Inverness and London in the latter half of February and the first half of March to discuss the Dewar Committee's Report.

I am glad to tell you that at the area meetings it was evident that in general the Dewar Committee's Report had been very well received. This I believe is a great tribute to the work of the Dewar Committee, which on so many matters had eventually to come down on one side or the other when deciding what recommendation to make where arguments in favour of one course of action or another were nicely balanced.

The area meetings were most valuable and it is heartening to read from the reports of them which were submitted to the Council of the constructive way in which members advanced their views.

There were two matters about which quite a few members seemed to be troubled. The first is one which is not really an essential part of the Dewar Committee's proposals, viz: the recommendation that the Council should cease issuing recommended rates of remuneration for non-graduate apprentices. In the light of what was said at the area meetings the Council has remitted this matter to the Apprentices (Recruitment, Education and Training) Committee for further study and report to the Council. The second, which is more difficult, concerns the extent of the concessions and exemptions which should be given to certain types of graduate. This topic, along with the reports of the area meetings and letters which were received from various members commenting on the Committee's report, has been remitted to the Dewar Committee by the Council for further consideration and report.

Whether on these important matters the Council will ultimately change the views which it expressed on considering the Dewar Committee's Report last December, I would not like to forecast. Members can however rest assured that in the light of all that has been said these two points in particular will be looked at again most carefully.

Aberdeen Society's Centenary

Reference is also made in the annual report to the celebrations held on March 20th and 21st, 1967, to mark the centenary of The Society of Accountants in Aberdeen which was incorporated by Royal Charter in 1867 and absorbed into the Institute at the time of the amalgamation of 1951. Since I had the privilege of presiding over the meetings which were held on that occasion it is not easy for me to assess them impartially. I can however tell you that the Institute's guests who attended the business sessions and social functions were very forthcoming indeed in their praise of all the arrangements, and I would like to pay tribute to the hard work of a large team of organizers under the leadership of Mr John Davidson and Mr J. P. Grant, who laid the foundations for the success which, I think it safe to say, was undoubtedly achieved.

OFFICE BEARERS

Chartered Accountants for New Zealand?

SIR, — The current interest in accountancy 'down under' (vide the introduction to 'The Profession in New Zealand', in your March 18th issue) may justify some further comments on aspects of this subject which, inevitably, do not normally come to the notice of your readers. I hope it is not inappropriate that they should be made by an English immigrant who came to New Zealand in his thirties and qualified here ten years ago.

From the statistical sample reported in the article by the Secretary of our Society, your readers may visualize an accountancy body here with a somewhat broader spread from the sphere of public practice towards employment in industry and commerce than occurs in the chartered bodies of the British Isles. The New Zealand Society's structure may appear more to resemble that of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants. Indeed, the two have close relations, and the New Zealand accountant of two years' standing who arrives in England can request admission to the Association without further examination.

The New Zealand Society differs, however, from both the chartered bodies and the Association in its attitude to training, as it has neither the system of articles nor that of registered studentship to bring the student into an official relationship with the professional body. There is a requirement, since recent years, that the successful examination candidate cannot be elected to membership without five years' experience (which can be gained before or after examination) in an undertaking approved by the Society. Included in such approved undertakings are both public accountancy practices and a variety of other offices.

Although the Society encourages autonomous student bodies, the fact remains that there is no official cognizance of the individual until he applies for admission. It may be imagined that if the Society takes less responsibility for, and authority over, the student than do accountancy bodies elsewhere, the New Zealand student in turn feels less closely bound to the qualified body.

This vagueness of relationship is enhanced by another distinctive feature of the Society's arrangements for membership. Following the practice of many of the faculties of New Zealand universities — arts and science, as well as commerce and law — the Society allows the student 'single subject passes' in the nine subjects he must master. Though there is a maximum to the number that can be attempted in one year and requirements to take some subjects as prerequisites to others, there is no grouping of the examination into parts with the proviso that the whole of the part must be completed simultaneously. Nor is there any restriction on the number of times that examination can be attempted. I remember watching the chief accountant of a large subsidiary of a leading British company console a colleague on examination failure by using his fingers to count the years in which he had sat what was, in his own case, the last hurdle; he required both hands. A former pupil of mine obtained, in 1964, his first success since 1938; he still aims to qualify.

There is thus in New Zealand nobody who has failed the Society's examinations, though there are many — from company chairmen downwards — who have one or two subjects yet to pass. In their eyes, the student has no more standing in the profession than they have themselves and the qualified man is only a little more proficient. Hence, to a group of people who might be expected to guide opinion for the betterment of the Society's 'public image', the professional body lacks prestige.

There are, in the Society itself, critics of this situation. They include the Incorporated Institute of Accountants, which is not referred to in Mr Graham's survey of the profession. This is a body older than the Society, containing about a thousand of the principals and employees in public practice. They have, of course, to be members of the Society to have the statutory right to use the designation 'public accountant' or 'registered accountant'. Their policy has been, for many years, to bring the Society into line with chartered bodies elsewhere and to have five years' training in a public accountant's practice as a condition of membership. However, when the New Zealand Society of Accountants speaks 'with one voice to Government, to the universities, and to the profession abroad' it is, understandably, the voice of the majority that prevails.

If there is to be an endeavour to bring the profession into line with overseas practice, it would appear that this should include bringing the Society's training of its 'chartered accountants for New Zealand' into line with that of chartered accountants in Australia, South Africa, Canada, and the British Isles, as well as changing the designation of its members.

Institute of Taxation

London Branch Residential Conference

A RESIDENTIAL taxation conference was held by the London Branch of the Institute of Taxation at Trinity College, Cambridge, last week-end, under the chairmanship of Mr Desmond F. Airey, A.C.A., F.A.C.C.A., F.T.I.I., Chairman of the Branch. The President of the Institute, Mr George Whillans, F.I.B., F.T.I.I., was present throughout the conference at which there were 152 participants.

The proceedings commenced on Friday afternoon with an introductory address by Mr Airey; the President of the Institute also spoke at the opening session and joined the Chairman in welcoming members to the conference. After dinner that evening, Mr Peter Rees, Barrister-at-law, F.T.I.I., spoke on 'A practical approach to the problems arising from the Finance Acts of 1965 and 1966', and his address was followed by discussion with the full panel of lecturers.

At the first session on Saturday, Mr T. M. Wedderburn, T.D., C.A., W.S., F.T.I.I., addressed members on the identification of shares and securities, including part disposals and calculations of capital gains and losses. Mr D. R. Dawes, F.A.C.C.A., F.T.I.I., then gave a lecture on the identification of wasting assets and computation for capital gains.

The two addresses on capital gains tax were followed by working sessions for which the conference broke up into groups to solve practical problems on capital gains set by the lecturers. After tea, Mr R. J. Pickerill, F.C.A., F.T.I.I., spoke on the subject of corporation tax basic computations, the treatment of losses, management expenses, taxed income and taxed charges.

Saturday evening commenced with dinner at which the guest of honour, who replied to the toast to the guests, was Mr Peter Walker, M.B.E., M.P., and the latter part of the evening was devoted to playing through a most amusing and instructive recorded mock interview between an Inspector of Taxes and a taxpayer and his accountant.

For the first session on Sunday morning, the conference again broke up into groups to work through practical problems relating to corporation tax. The final lecture was given by Mr Halmer Hudson, F.C.A.,

F.T.I.I., on the subject of close company computations, directors' remuneration, distributions and the shortfall provisions, and this was followed by general discussion with the whole panel of lecturers.

At the closing session the lecturers gave their general observations on the conference and their further thoughts with regard to problems raised by members at the lecture meetings and in the working groups. The Chairman gave a closing address thanking the lecturers for the excellence of their papers and the President of the Institute for the support he had given to the conference.

Changing the Structure of the Profession

President's Comments at Birmingham Dinner

PROPOSED changes in the structure of the accountancy profession, including the integration of the main accountancy bodies in Britain, would set the pattern for the next fifty years, said Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., F.C.A., President of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, in Birmingham on Friday of last week.

Sir Henry who was speaking at the annual dinner of the Birmingham and District Society of Chartered Accountants, said it behoved every great profession to take stock of itself every few years in order to find out where it was going.

A letter containing the proposals [referred to in The Accountant of March 18th] had been sent to every member of the Institute and similar letters had been sent out by the other principal accountancy bodies to their members. The proposals, which were still tentative, took eight main 'streams'.

Integration

The first of these, said Sir Henry, involved, mainly, the merging of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants and The Institute of Municipal Treasurers into one body.

Sir Henry said that whenever there was a merger there was a feeling that one was giving rather than receiving something. But in this case, he hoped that when the proposals were studied carefully by every member of the various bodies, it would be felt that there had been a fair deal for all.

Another proposal was to raise the entry standard of the profession at least to minimum university level. For too long, he said, they had been regarded as an 'O' level profession and this was doing them no good at all. They were not getting an adequate supply of suitable recruits.

It was also planned to introduce a one-year, full-time training course for those entering the profession. The time when evening classes and correspondence courses formed a student's only theoretical training was coming to an end, although there would always be a place for this type of teaching in some branches of accountancy. Training at college and polytechnics would be grant-aided.

Training in Industry

The Council was also suggesting that accountants should be trained in industry and commerce as well as in offices. The fact had to be faced that 70 per cent of qualified accountants left practice to seek their fortunes in commerce and industry and, when considering the profession as a whole, adequate training must be provided for those wishing to take up this kind of work.

Another important change being considered was the forming of a 'lower tier' of accountants, called licentiates, to deal with more routine work. In this connection, entry standards, general standards of training and professional attainment and examination syllabuses would have to be revised.

A study was being made of the whole of qualification, training and the range and depth of knowledge required by accountants. There was a growing need for more specialization, and in future diplomas and certificates would be issued to those with special skills in taxation, investigation, auditing and several branches of management work.

'On threshold of great advances'

Sir Henry said he was certain they were on the threshold of 'really great advances' in the profession which would set the pattern for the next fifty years. In the last two or three years he had studied the profession in every English-speaking country in the world and if the various proposals found favour with the membership at large, the Institute would be in the forefront of all such associations in the world.

A toast to the City of Birmingham was proposed formally by Mr P. G. Craven, T.D., F.C.A., President of the Birmingham and District Society of Chartered Accountants, and was responded to by the Lord Mayor of Birmingham, Alderman Harold E. Tyler, J.P., F.R.I.C.S., F.A.I.

Mr E. J. Riseley, O.B.E., T.D., Vice-President of the Textile Distributors' Association, who proposed the toast to The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, recalled that the Institute received its Charter nearly ninety years ago and said that the high standard of conduct that was demanded in the early days remained today unaltered.

Responding to the toast to the guests, proposed by Mr Craven, Professor R. H. Maudsley, M.A., B.C.L., LL.B., S.J.D., Professor of Law at King's College, London, said that many universities teaching law did not touch company law and did not even think it important enough to teach students how to look at a balance sheet. He said he would like to see a combination of serious academic study and work aimed at satisfying the needs of society today.

THE ACCOUNTANTS' CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP

Annual General Meeting

The annual general meeting of the Accountants' Christian Fellowship last Friday approved the report and accounts for the year to December 31st, 1966, showing a membership of 382. The following officers were elected for 1967:

Chairman: Mr Douglas H. E. Kahn, F.C.A.

Secretary: Mr R. J. Carter, B.COM., F.C.A.

Auditor: Mr Noel G. Davson, F.C.A.

Committee: Messrs Tom W. A. R. Auker, F.C.A., Percy F. Cansdale, B.COM., F.C.A., Douglas L. Combridge, F.C.A., Michael P. Derenburg, A.C.A., Paul D. Ginnings, Alan P. Ritchie, A.C.A.

The elected officers were thanked for their active support of the Fellowship in 1966 and similar thanks were expressed to Mr R. Alan Coupland, F.C.A. (retiring Chairman), Mr Brian O. Chilver, F.C.A., and Mr Allan L. Plumpton, F.C.A. (speakers' secretaries), and Mr Keith C. A. Cotton, F.C.A. (prayer meetings secretary).

Following the annual meeting, the Fellowship was addressed by Sir Maurice Parsons, Deputy Governor of The Bank of England, on 'The role of Christians in present-day society'. It was clear, said Sir Maurice, that change was more rampant today than for a long time, but he agreed with Mr Arthur Toynbee that too many people wanted to get something for nothing and that all the energy and enterprise being put into crime might have done much to help the country out of its economic difficulties if it had been applied in other directions. The basic characteristics of greed and lack of moral sense seemed to be growing, though perhaps, less obviously in the professions than in industry and commerce. The principle of 'grab' was eroding the responsibility of the community. Another characteristic of this age was its extraordinary degree of restlessness, leading so often to mental disorder.

The reason for these conditions was an urgent subject for inquiry. He felt that Christians could not ignore the fact that the developments were accompanied by the heavy fall in the number of churchgoers - it had now become unconventional to go to church - and that nowadays it was held fashionable to disbelieve even in God. Wrongdoing used to be frowned on and criminals felt that what they were doing was wrong; now it was only wrong to be caught.

In face of these facts, Christians had to ask themselves what they should be doing. The Lord Jesus had always emphasized unity; he told his followers to 'love one another'. One of the devil's most effective attacks had been to create divisions amongst Christians; he had cultivated the emphasis on 'heresy' even to the extent of provoking war between those who called themselves Christians. Another of his devastating attacks was through the encouragement of formalism as a substitute for real spiritual exercise; this inevitably led to scepticism, the wilting of faith and the repulse of unbelievers.

Christians ought therefore to concentrate upon:

- (1) working for union - a Christian community of faith without basic divisions;
- (2) recognition that they were inevitably involved in the running of a society with both Christians and unbelievers, and that God's purposes embrace all.

SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

Many chartered accountants will be interested to learn of the talks which have been instituted by the Southend-on-Sea Chartered Accountants' Group for the formation of a South Essex Branch of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants.

MANUAL OF WORKS ACCOUNTING

IN THE GEE'S
SERIES

How often in Industry do we find the Accountant attempting to produce sophisticated information without a solid accounting system on which to build? How many accounting organizations are operated on the 'two-tier' system of financial accounting and cost accounting without integration?

The integrated system outlined in this manual is a practical system, the integrated nominal ledger used in the system is the key to the whole operation, it can be read like a book, to reveal all the essential details of the factory's activity. Production of reliable, speedy, Management Accounts and statistics is almost a simple operation.

The author has found that, during his thirteen years in industry, there are many firms without a reliable Management Accounting system and also many who have little or no understanding of the real meaning of 'integration'. The author also found that while studying for professional qualifications and seeking practical experience early in his career that there appeared to be very few, if any, books available which dealt with the complete accounting system, especially in the engineering industry to which this book is primarily directed.

It is considered that this book is the first publication to lay down the complete accounting system for the engineering industry which will be invaluable to students, accountants in industry, and also accountants in practice.

This complete system has been successfully introduced in engineering factories producing a wide variety of products, both as single units, and in factories linked to a central organization. Once this basic system has been introduced then sophistication can follow.

for professional advisers from EXTEL

Capital issues with adjusted stock market prices

The second edition of Extel's successful new service will be published at the end of April. This will cover the fiscal years 1965/66 and 1966/67, to be supported during 1967/68 by three cumulative supplements in July, October and January.

The service may now be regarded as an authority on the valuation of quoted securities for Capital Gains Tax purposes. It has been ordered by the Inland Revenue for use in every local Tax Inspector's office throughout the United Kingdom.

Subscription for the 1967/68 fiscal year: £10.

Dividends

In response to increasing demand from professional advisers, Extel is introducing at the beginning of the fiscal year a new annual record of dividend payments.

Contained in a separate bound volume, every Company quoted on any U.K. Stock Exchange will be listed in alphabetical order, together with details of the dividend payments on both Preference and Ordinary Share Capital. Companies passing their dividends will also be shown in their appropriate place in the alphabetical list.

The record will contain:—

Details of stock—details of dividend expressed as a percentage rate and an amount per share—dates for declaration, entitlement, payment and ex-dividend. Scrip and rights issues will also be indicated as a further useful guide.

The first volume of the dividend record will cover dividends paid during the 1966/67 fiscal year.

Both services will be offered on approval for 14 days, further details available from:—

Most pension schemes are planned to provide for a predetermined annuity or capital sum for its purchase. Usually, only a portion of investment gains is made available to meet any possible additional requirements.

A privately administered pension plan can, however, be depended upon to achieve the maximum from successful investment. This is the way we work at Chase Manhattan. Pension plans are so devised that they create a fund into which all investment gains are ploughed back. The fund is better able, therefore, to safeguard the plan against such contingencies as inflation.

Why not have a chat with us, let us show you how, in conjunction with an independent consulting actuary, a plan can be prepared to meet your organization's precise requirements. You'll discover just what an advantage it is to have a friend at Chase Manhattan.

The Company Sec. was livid!

*You should have heard him! Getting all upset just because we'd bought a vending machine. He began to calm down a bit when we told him it was an OLL-O-MATIC and when he worked-out the saving it would make he was quite enthusiastic. The company, who have always been in the lead with the provision of oral tuition in accordance with the changing pattern of examination preparation, have now decided to hold one-week classes by way of introduction to the Part I Final examination of the Institute.

The first of these will be held during the week June 19th to 23rd, i.e. shortly after the announcement of the Intermediate examination results. The emphasis will be on new subjects that students have not met in their Intermediate studies, and in particular on Taxation and Executorship. This should considerably ease the path of students tackling these and other new subjects for the first time. The fee is 12 guineas for a one-week full-time course. Accommodation will be limited, and those wishing to enrol provisionally, while awaiting their Intermediate examination result, may do so on payment of a deposit of £3 3s which will be refunded in the event of cancellation owing to failure in the Intermediate examination.

Barren Budget

FOR some years past it has become increasingly clear that the annual Budget has become of diminishing importance as a means of regulating the national economy. Certainly in the last eighteen months no one has made this point more clearly than have Mr CALLAGHAN and Mr WILSON by their periodic ad hoc policy statements dictated by the course of events. Since there is now an increasing body of informed opinion which considers that the annual Finance Bill, with its detailed provisions for tax amendments, should be separated from the Budget speech, it would appear at first sight that little purpose is served by continuing with the April Budget in its traditional form.

This is not to judge the 1967 Budget solely by the absence of tax changes. The fact is that the CHANCELLOR will pursue the same policy as in the past, i.e. adjustments to fiscal and monetary policy as and when the economic situation seems to warrant them. At the moment there is every reason for consolidating overseas opinion behind the £ with a cautious Budget statement.

Nevertheless, a major annual review of the economic and financial circumstances of the nation is necessary. On this basis the Budget speech should provide, however, not merely a review of the economic events of the past year but – much more important – a reasoned statement of Government policy in respect of the coming twelve months. Above all, the speech should give a clear indication of how the objectives for the next twelve months are to be achieved.

It is in this particular respect that Mr CALLAGHAN's performance on Tuesday warrants serious criticism. The most important statement he uttered in the course of a singularly uninspiring speech – a large part of which was thoroughly familiar to any reasonably informed member of the public – was that he anticipated an annual growth rate of 3 per cent between now and 1970. In itself this point is important, not least in view of the fact that it represents a substantial reduction in the expectations as set out in the now defunct National Plan. It is even more important, however, because the fulfilment of this expectation provides the basis of the present Budget and Government economic policy for the next three years.

The public is entitled to learn how Britain's rate of economic growth can be increased, without either reversing the recent improvement in the balance of payments, or allowing a new phase of cost inflation in consequence of a spate of unjustified pay awards after the end of June. To these crucial questions the CHANCELLOR gave no answer. One can only assume that, as has been stated before in these pages, this is evidence that neither the Government nor its advisers has any new ideas for regulating the economy in such a way as to avoid either continuous under-employment of the nation's resources or the successive bouts of 'stop-go'. This is the real message of the 1967 Budget speech and it is a chastening one indeed.

The economic aspects of the speech apart, among the various proposals which Mr CALLAGHAN introduced, few are of any financial significance. Admittedly, he has made a major effort to stimulate savings during the coming year by increasing the permitted holding of National Savings Certificates from £500 to £750, and that of Premium Bonds by the same amount to £1,250. Probably of even greater significance in this respect – at least in the long run – is the somewhat overdue decision to allow the trustee savings bank movement to manage its own unit trust. Details of this scheme will be awaited with interest, since it could initiate a new era for the small shareholder and generate a new pattern of saving.

Companies are to be allowed to acquire forthwith new tax certificates earning interest for three years instead of two, carrying  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent interest if they are surrendered for cash, but 4 per cent if tendered in payment of tax. These rates of return (given 40 per cent corporation tax) are equal to  $4\frac{1}{8}$  per cent and  $6\frac{3}{8}$  per cent gross. This proposal may provide the Government with a larger share of corporate liquid assets and thus enable it to raise the funds to cover the prospective overall deficit of nearly £1,000 million more easily.

Among sundry minor changes, the most important is doubtless the decision to repay half the Selective Employment Tax in respect of part-time workers – defined for this purpose as those working under twenty-one hours per week. This will reverse the present tendency in the service trades to dispense with part-time labour, apart from giving the hotel and service industries much-needed relief.

The elimination of stamp duty on the sale of houses costing under £5,500, as against £4,500 hitherto, with  $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent duty on those between £5,500 and £7,000, is tacit recognition of the inflation in property prices that has taken place. It doubtless reflects, too, the Government's growing awareness that an increase in owner-occupation can relieve the pressure on public sector housing with its ever-increasing cost.

Contrary to expectations there was no relaxation in hire-purchase regulations affecting consumer durable goods, except in respect of three-wheeled cars, motor cycles and bicycles. For these the initial deposit is reduced from 40 to 25 per cent and the period of repayment extended from twenty-four to twenty-seven months. The motor-car industry will doubtless have noted this concession somewhat ruefully.

For reasons more obvious to readers of this journal than to the public at large, no major changes in the tax structure were proposed. Of particular interest to the profession is the CHANCELLOR's proposal that the proceeds of the sale of residual rights in works at least ten years old of authors and creative artists may be spread over a period of up to six years for tax purposes. Losses of hobby farmers may still be set off against other income but for no more than five years running, except when there are special circumstances. As the result of the introduction of the betterment levy, development value will be excluded from the capital gains tax. The mineral rights duty is at long last to be repealed.

It is proposed to increase to 4 per cent from April 19th the rate of interest on tax due of more than £1,000, with a provision for charging interest where a company deducts tax from distributions but does not pay it to the Inland Revenue by the due date. Readers will await with considerable interest what the CHANCELLOR has in mind when he referred to 'a comprehensive review of tax avoidance practices before the next Budget'.

In the field of personal taxation, the dependent relative allowance is increased from £75 to £110 for single women, including widows and separated wives. Similarly, the additional personal allowance for single people with sole responsibility for children is raised from £40 to £75. Together, these changes will cost the Exchequer a mere £3 $\frac{3}{4}$  million, but they should give some help where it is most needed.

Considerable surprise will be felt by many taxpayers at the CHANCELLOR's statement that there was no reason for concern at the level of public sector expenditure –  $8\frac{1}{2}$  per cent higher in the coming year than last; although he did concede that he would review the matter, 'focusing particularly on 1968-69 in the exercise to moderate the future rise in public expenditure.' No doubt the inflationary effects of the proposed expenditure of £11,063 million will contribute to the maintenance of the current level of economic activity; but this still leaves the question of how the increasing revenue requirements of the Government in the next few years are to be met, given the very modest rate of economic growth to be expected.

Mr CALLAGHAN's peroration – 'We are back on course. The ship is picking up speed. Every seaman knows the command at such a moment: "Steady as she goes"' – may have appealed to his listeners. For the public at large, however, it is important to know that the course has been properly charted. On this point there may well be some doubts.

Transport Facts and Figures

INLAND transport is a very well documented sector of the economy, at least from the statistical point of view. It is, however, a salutary exercise to survey this sector from time to time, otherwise it is hardly possible to keep up with the rapid changes which are occurring in some branches of this most important activity. Currently the main facts seem to be as follows.

The annual census in 1965 revealed that there were over 12 $\frac{3}{4}$  million road vehicles for which licences were in operation. Nearly 9 million of these were in respect of cars and 1 $\frac{3}{4}$  million for motor cycles. New vehicles are being registered at a rate of 1 $\frac{1}{2}$  million a year, though 1966 showed a slight drop on 1965 in which year 1.6 million new vehicles were registered for the first time. An even better year was 1964 with a total of 1.7 million new vehicles. Fluctuations in the total are due in the main to car registrations, those for other types of vehicles having remained fairly steady at half a million a year.

The current number of licences issued is over four times the 1938 figure; in that year 3,094,000 vehicles were licensed and the rate of new licensing was some 420,000 new vehicles, or about one-quarter the present figure.

The comparative size of road and rail transport is naturally a matter of interest both to social economists and to the public. Road traffic, as measured by vehicle-miles travelled on roads in Great Britain, increased by nearly 90 per cent between 1958 and 1966 – an average increase of 8 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent per annum. Car-miles travelled doubled – an average increase of 9 per cent a year.

As measured by ton-miles of inland goods transported, the increase between 1958 and 1966 may well turn out to be about 30 per cent. This increase conceals two conflicting movements: rail traffic carried by British Railways fell by 15 per cent in the eight years from 1958; and while complete results for 1966 are not yet available, it is likely that traffic carried on the roads, as measured in ton-miles, will be at least five-eighths greater than in 1958. Rail traffic has fallen continuously since 1960; road traffic increased year by year from 1958 to 1965 but the 1966 results may not show much change on 1965.

From time to time the Ministry of Transport carry out road traffic surveys. These surveys provide fairly reliable information on the total volume of goods carried on the roads of Britain. Rail traffic information is continuously available. The 1952 survey showed that 46 per cent of traffic was carried on the roads; 54 per cent went by rail. By 1958, the road proportion had increased to 56 per cent and by 1962 to 68 per cent. Applying the rate of growth in road transport and the rate of decline of rail transport discussed above, it would seem that in 1966 at least 73 per cent of inland transport was taken by road and only 27 per cent by rail.

Compared with 1938, current passenger miles carried on the railways last year showed a fall of about one-third; ton-miles of goods traffic carried in 1965 were about 90 per cent of the 1938 figure. Thus, rail traffic is probably at a higher proportion of the 1938 figure than most people would expect.

A traffic explosion has, however, occurred on the roads and common sense would surely dictate that roads should be given the lion's share of national expenditure on transport. It is true that rail journeys by passengers paying full fares have increased in number since 1962 – a reflection, no doubt, on the improved services brought about by large electrification schemes. Journeys at reduced fares are only half in number what they were in 1960, and journeys made by season-ticket holders have fallen by 10 per cent since 1960.

Any idea of attracting a large proportion of either goods or passenger transport back from the roads to the railways – at least by economic means – hardly seems feasible. In any case, a powerful new competitor for the long-distance passenger – the domestic airlines – is making considerable headway. In the meantime, Passenger Transport in Great Britain 1965, recently published by H.M.S.O., suggests that in 1965, 69 per cent of travellers used private transport compared with 66 per cent in 1964.

Scheduled services on domestic airline routes as measured by aircraft-miles flown doubled between 1958 and 1966; passengers carried in the latter year were more than three times the 1958 level. In 1966, at least 6 million passengers were carried by the domestic services of U.K. airlines – perhaps 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  per cent of the number carried by railways at full or reduced fares. No doubt the average air journey was much longer than the average rail journey but no figures seem to be available to provide this comparison. At present, freight carried by air on domestic services in terms of tons of freight is about 15 per cent of that carried by rail. Again, the journeys by air are probably longer than by rail and the goods carried are likely to be at the highest charges. Freight carried by air is increasing at an average of 30 per cent a year.

Current Affairs

Employment Subsidy for Development Areas

THE structural unemployment which characterized the pre-war unemployment situation is nowadays evidenced by the markedly higher rates of registered unemployment in the Development Areas. Following upon the special incentives to capital expenditure and local financial assistance coupled with Board of Trade persuasion to firms going to these areas, a new subsidy is proposed in a Department of Economic Affairs study.

In The Development Areas: A proposal for a regional employment premium (H.M.S.O. 2s net), it is suggested that a premium – in other words a subsidy – of £1 to £2 per male employee should be paid to manufacturing firms (as defined for the S.E.T. premium) in the Development Areas. While it is not suggested that the scheme – which could cost about £100 million – shall be permanent (although in the event it most probably would be), the principles involved are such that the Government has rightly put forward the scheme for public discussion. Legislation will follow only if it attracts adequate support.

The objections to the proposal are obvious. First, it will surely be regarded as a breach of the principles vested in G.A.T.T. (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) which prohibit specific or general subsidies for exports. Secondly, since the industries in the Development Areas are in many cases on the decline, it will merely prolong the existing industrial structure instead of providing the opportunities for new labour intensive industries to come there. Thirdly, it could lead to employers in such areas acceding to unjustified wage demands. Fourthly, it intensifies the present discrimination against the labour-intensive service trades in favour of capital-intensive manufacturing industry.

The D.E.A. proposal ignores the basic problem, i.e. the rigidity of the wages structure due to collective bargaining on the national level. Furthermore, it does nothing to stimulate the more efficient use of labour; indeed, it proposes the reverse and labour is, after all, the country's scarcest resource.

Pre-Budget Documentation

THE annual pre-Budget spate of official reports and White Papers which emerged at the end of last week provided no indication of the pattern of official thinking on budgetary policy. The Economic Report on 1966 merely confirmed what has long been evident, i.e. the squeeze and period of severe restraint on incomes have halted the inflation of costs and prices, substantially corrected the balance of payments deficit and brought in their train a decline in industrial output and private sector investment, to say nothing of higher unemployment. The longer-term issues were, for obvious reasons, ignored in the report.

The White Paper on Preliminary Estimates of National Income and Balance of Payments 1961-66 (Cmnd 3244), showed that the gross national product at factor cost rose in 1966 from £30,997 million to £32,371 million – virtually to the same extent as between 1964 and 1965. The overall increase conceals marked variations in the changes in factor incomes. Thus, income from employment was higher at £22,346 million as against £21,035 million in 1965, as were rents, £1,765 million to £1,913 million and the trading surpluses of the public corporations from £1,000 million to £1,037 million. In contrast, income from self-employment was marginally down from £2,484 million to £2,475 million, although incomes of professional persons were slightly higher at £449 million against £438 million. Gross trading profits of companies fell from £4,859 million to £4,638 million, after allowing for depreciation.

Consumer expenditure rose from £22,744 million to £24,007 million, or by little more than 1 per cent in real terms; and while outlays on alcohol and tobacco were higher in 1966, at £1,517 million and £1,504 million respectively, expenditure on durable goods declined. Thus for cars and motor-cycles, the 1966 outlay was £787 million against £801 million; furniture and floor coverings from £510 million to £502 million, and electrical goods from £528 million to £523 million.

Gross domestic fixed capital formation measured at constant 1958 prices was slightly higher in 1966 at £5,592 million compared with £5,546 million. Within this aggregate, however, public sector outlays rose by some £150 million, to offset the decline in private sector outlays from £3,155 million to £3,042 million. A notable change within the group figures comprising these aggregates was the drop of £62 million in private housing outlays to £554 million, which exceeded the £30 million increase in public sector housing expenditure. In the manufacturing sector, the decline in the private sector was more than offset by the increase in the gas, electricity and water group which invested nearly £100 million more at £831 million, or £150 million in current prices at £977 million.

The other White Paper, Loans from Consolidated Fund 1967-68 (Cmnd. 3243) presented the capital financing requirements of the nationalized industries for which the Exchequer is nowadays responsible.

Tax-free Compensation

THE Court of Appeal last week held (in Scott v. Ricketts) that no tax was payable on a sum of £39,000 which an estate agent received from Ravenscroft Properties Ltd in consideration of his withdrawing any claim he might have to participate in a development scheme in Bristol.

The Bristol Co-operative Society had lost its Castle Street site during the war by bombing. In 1955 the local authority proposed to acquire the Castle Street site compulsorily and to grant the Society an alternative site and compensation. In these negotiations, the estate agent, Mr Ricketts, acted for the Society, which, however, decided on a different site, leaving the first alternative site to be taken over by a company proposed to be formed by Mr Ricketts. Later, it was proposed that Mr Ricketts would share with Ravenscroft. Eventually Ravenscroft acted alone and paid Mr. Ricketts the £39,000. First the Crown said that this sum was a receipt of his business and taxable as such; then the Crown assessed it under Case VI of Schedule D. It was this assessment which the Court of Appeal discharged.

Lord Denning said that if a person had a good claim which was compromised, then that was in the same nature as the sale of a capital asset; there was no difference where the claim was only a moral one. The mere fact that the payment was made under a contract compromising the moral claim did not make it taxable.

Presentation of Prizes

PRIZES and certificates of merit awarded in the September and November 1966 examinations of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales and in the first examination for the Certificate in Management Information, were presented at a ceremony in the Livery Hall, Guildhall, London, on Wednesday of last week. In the course of his speech, the President, Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., F.C.A., said:

'This task which falls to the President of the year is one of the most agreeable that he has to perform. For the prize-winners I hope it will be so also; it is the outward and visible sign of achievement and I congratulate them most warmly. It is also a great satisfaction to us at the Institute because we know that the life-blood of the Institute is being refreshed with men of calibre and quality, which will help us in the unceasing battle to provide good administration for the profession, and help to raise professional attainment.

'You may find, as the years go by - perhaps you have found it already - that there is no great satisfaction in achievement. The thrill of life lies in pursuit - in reaching after the unattainable and then going through the excruciating pleasure and agony of wondering whether it is within your grasp and whether you have done it or not.

'I say these things to you because I think the time will come when you will want to give something back to the profession and when you do I hope you realize that there is no crown which is not within your grasp. I hope you will repay the profession, for example, by working in the students' societies and the district societies, by helping with the courses, and then, perhaps, as the years go by, in joining the Council itself.

'I would like to say a special word to the parents. If you look back twenty years or so, you must have often gazed into your children's cots or cradles wondering how they were going to make out. And in the years which followed I dare say you went through many emotions of hope, anxiety, frustration and, for some, not a little personal sacrifice. But I hope this day for you is one of untrammelled pride and satisfaction.

'I have one other very agreeable thing to say to you today. Last year was the first in which we conducted the examination for Certificate in Management Information and the first prize-winner is here. The first prize in that examination has been donated by Sir Harold Howitt, who has been kind enough to come here to present it in person. He is acknowledged as the doyen of the profession and we are very happy to have him with us'.

Sir Harold Howitt presents the Howitt Prize for First Place in the first C.M.I. examination to Mr W. H. J. MORDY, A.C.A., of Leeds.

P. D. Leake Teaching Fellowships

WITH a view to remedying in some measure the acute shortage of teachers in accountancy, the P. D. Leake Trust is seeking to establish a number of teaching fellowships tenable at the following universities or comparable institutions: Bath, Birmingham, Bradford, Bristol, Hull, Kent (at Canterbury), Leeds, Liverpool, London School of Economics (London University), London Business School, Manchester, Manchester Business School, Newcastle upon Tyne, Nottingham, Sheffield, Southampton, Wales (Cardiff and Aberystwyth). Universities or institutions other than these may be considered in certain circumstances.

Applications are invited from suitably qualified accountants, preferably with some experience after qualification, who are interested in a teaching career and wish to study for a higher degree. The fellows would be expected, at the discretion of the educational institution concerned, to do some teaching.

The duration of the fellowships will normally be one to two years, though this may be extended to three years if the university regulations so require. Each fellowship carries an annual grant of £1,750; a further contribution towards overheads may also be paid subject to an overall limit of £2,200.

Applications are required to be made to the Secretary of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, by April 30th.

by An Industrious Accountant

THE advertisement in the paper asked for a general manager. He should be experienced in administration; able to lead and inspire his team of experts; skilled in financial matters and with a record of proved ability. Reorganization and the setting of new targets had become urgently necessary in a recognizably large national concern, which wanted a first-class executive at a dazzling basic salary.

As I read the challenging phrases I was conscious of the wasted years behind me; years of statistics and costings and legal minutiae; years of producing materials for others to develop; years that the locusts had eaten. Others had shaped policies and dreamed of new destinies. We in the accounts department had counted money, had fumbled in a greasy till – in Yeats' phrase – had been content with lesser things. The time was opportune for change.

Maybe it was the spirit of spring in the air, or the stale recriminations at the board meeting that morning, or the world-ranging activities of the firm of consultants that had inserted the advertisement. Maybe it was just plain foolishness.

Whatever it was, my letter of application was in the post that evening. After all, the leader-writers had enlarged on the dearth of talent or shortage of executive potential; here was the chance of a breakthrough. Besides, as my saner self whispered in the small hours when some gloomy forebodings loomed up, the ad letter was marked 'Confidential'.

The acknowledgement came as a matter of course; the invitation to attend for interview at 3 p.m. on Thursday week seemed inevitable. As I entered the door of the consultants' offices my thoughts were in a whirl . . . the imminent discussion with the new directors – those national figures whose portentous pronouncements could rock the country . . . their hawk-eyed caution melting into enthusiastic welcome; their unanimous offer – money no object naturally in this case . . . I warned myself briskly against over-optimism. After all, it might easily run to a second interview before the matter was concluded.

Our chairman at home, I reflected, would be rather upset. We'd been very friendly; it would be painful to have to reject his offer of a seat on the board, a much increased salary, a service contract. . . .

It was a very small room that I was shown into, with just enough space for myself and the interviewer. He was there to sift the more outstanding candidates as a preliminary gesture, he explained cordially. He seemed little more than 30, very fluent, with a flashing smile and thick spectacles. He gave no indication of his status or qualifications; he looked the type of man I used to interview for a job in our debtors ledger section. No directors were in sight; no blank contracts.

Never have I experienced such a pleasant interview. He sounded impressed with my record, appreciative of my accountancy qualifications, almost overwhelmed with my financial experience – a few routine deals over the years with overdrafts or short-term loans. He scribbled hasty notes when I mentioned budgetary control and forecasting. 'I say!' he ejaculated, 'this is really something.' In reply to my various questions, however, he showed but meagre knowledge of the problems of his principals, or of the possible scope for my dynamic drive.

He told me beamingly, as he saw me out the door, that I'd be on the short list and would be hearing again from him soon. His insincerity was obvious but somehow not surprising.

Some time later the papers published a picture of the successful candidate. He had been the assistant general manager of another firm in the group. He'd been tipped for the job from the outset, the papers said, but his directors had tested the market before making their final decision.

My only consolation was that if the board was as inept as all that, then one wouldn't really want to be their general manager; nevertheless, I felt sadly cut down to size.

The Work of the Loss Adjuster

by G. P. BARTLETT, A.C.A., A.C.I.L.A., F.C.I.I.

IN recent years the profession of the loss adjuster has been portrayed on television (Our Mr Ambler), on the radio (Destination Fire), and on film (Fortune is a Woman). Jack Hawkins in the film probably came nearest to authenticity, but even so the projected image of the adjuster was grossly over-glamorized.

Loss adjusting seems to have emerged from two sources: the occupation of auctioneer and valuer, and that of architect and property manager. In those capacities many of the present firms were established long before they were in business as loss adjusters.

Today, adjusters are sometimes described as the eyes and ears of the insurance companies. There are 250 associates and fellows of the Chartered Institute of Loss Adjusters, of whom twenty-two or more are also chartered surveyors or architects, and three are chartered accountants. Half the qualified members are employed in only ten firms; and out of fifty-nine firms in the United Kingdom there are some twenty-three with London offices.

It has been said that the Chartered Institute of Loss Adjusters is the smallest chartered body; and it has also been said that its members deal with as much as 90 per cent of the annual fire wastage, which is currently running at about £82 million.

Importance of independence

Loss adjusters lay great store by their independence, and one of the oldest rules of membership is that they should not hold agencies for insurance companies or participate in any other business. The adjuster's role is that of mediator, or arbitrator, between insured and insurer; he interprets the contract of insurance equitably as between the parties and, contrary to popular belief, assumes in every case an instruction to be impartial. Because of this, it is by no means uncommon to find the adjuster pointing out to a claimant items inadvertently omitted from the claim statement, and no reputable insurer would object to this. Unfortunately, human nature being what it is, most claims tend to be overstated rather than understated.

When the fire brigade has left, the insured's first thought is to find his policy and notify either his broker or insurance company of the loss. The insurer then has to decide, on the available information, whether the loss merits the appointment of an adjuster and if so, which adjuster to instruct. For a major fire this is a crucial decision but naturally each company and underwriter has favourite firms in different areas of the country, stemming from years of expert service.

Fires and other perils do not follow a predetermined time-table and regardless of the time of day or night the adjuster may have to drop everything and go. In certain circumstances, the London Fire Brigade or the Salvage Corps may telephone an adjuster direct when the offices are closed, and in such cases the adjuster carries out his duties 'on behalf of whomsoever it may concern'. Naturally, he hopes that formal instructions will follow when the interested insurers become known, but he understands that he has no special right to instructions merely because he attended at the outset.

Investigation

At his first visit the adjuster has several functions to perform. These are to inspect the damage, to investigate the cause, to interview witnesses, and to instruct and advise the insured. At this stage the investigation of cause and the interviewing of witnesses, especially where a third party may be involved, are perhaps the most important. This may require the examination of technical problems; for example, the possibility of a fault in electrical equipment, or the chain of events leading to a gas explosion, or the reason for a fire or other failure in complex plant and machinery. The adjuster cannot be an expert in all these different technical matters, but he must be sufficiently versatile to spot possibilities and know where to make further investigation or inquiry.

This is particularly important where any features arouse suspicion in the adjuster's mind as to whether the fire was fortuitous in so far as the insured was concerned. Having done this at the preliminary visit, the adjuster then has to indicate to insurers in his preliminary report whether the policy is liable and to estimate the loss.

It has been said that every fire has a cause and that fires do not just happen. It is part of the adjuster's duty to trace the cause of fires, if at all possible and, if necessary, with the assistance of the fire brigade or forensic science department of the C.I.D. If it can be established that a fire was deliberately set, the next stage must be to decide whether there was a motive. Fire-raising without a motive includes fires caused by those with unbalanced minds such as lunatics, mental defectives, epileptics, and psychopaths.

There may well be a subconscious motive such as an unhappy home background, lack of parental care, emotional instability, or sexual abnormality. For example, a man who had been abandoned by his parents when he was a child started fire-raising when his wife left him. In another case fires were started on an impulse whenever an individual saw the words 'highly inflammable, avoid naked light'. There are also those who start fires merely to see the flames or because they want to hear the fire engine.

Fire-raising may well be motivated by a desire for financial gain, or because of the fear of discovery of fraud and embezzlement, or for reasons of revenge or hatred. Burglars have been known to start fires when their attempts at theft have been frustrated, and firemen have been known to start fires in order to create opportunities to perform heroic acts. The possibilities are endless, and the adjuster has to beware of assuming that a fire deliberately 'set' constitutes deliberate fraud on the part of the claimant.

The primitive methods of starting delayed-action fire, such as a candle in combustible materials, or saltpetre soaked in hemp-rope, have been superseded in recent years by more subtle and ingenious devices, some of which were taught during the war days to saboteurs: for example, the household alarm clock to the hammer of which is fixed a piece of explosive, can be used to start a fire at a pre-set time. A group of matches fixed to a lighted cigarette will flare up after ten minutes, while a candle standing in a celluloid tray filled with petrol may give a time lag of up to several hours. In one case a stick of phosphorus left in a balloon filled with water, from which there was a pin-hole leakage, provided a very long delay. Alternatively, certain chemicals or combinations of chemicals will react with water or in air, and some of these leave no trace other than carbon dioxide and water vapour. The skilful criminal will always endeavour to use materials which would normally be found in the premises.

Two categories

The operations of insurers are divided into two categories – the accident and the fire departments. Loss adjusters deal with claims from both departments. The accident department issues policies covering such perils as burglary and theft, and all risks on money and valuables. It insures goods in transit, liabilities such as public liability, employers' liability, professional negligence, and also the fidelity of employees. Thus, burglary, theft, and all risks claims come to the adjuster in quantity, as do claims for loss and damage to goods in transit. In recent years there has been a spate of lorry 'high-jacking' and other crime.

The public at large is more claims-conscious these days, so that there are greater numbers of claims for public liability against builders and others, employers' liability for accidents during work, and against professional men for negligence of one kind or another. From all these points of view, the scope of work for the loss adjuster is widening year by year in line with changes in the economy of the country, the increasing crime rate and fire wastage and the ever more hectic pace of modern life.

A glance at the personal column in The Daily Telegraph practically any day of the week will reveal a series of reward advertisements inserted by loss adjusters. It is customary to offer 10 per cent or pro rata of the value of the missing property, and provided the reward is for the conviction of the criminal as well as recovery of the property, this is entirely lawful.

'Bounty hunter'

The development of modern communications which make it possible for the adjuster to publicize a reward soon after a loss has occurred has encouraged a small group of persons known as 'bounty hunters'. These are professional informers who seek to make a living out of rewards offered by insurers and adjusters. At first sight this may appear to be a glamorous and adventurous way of earning a living but in practice this is far from the case. In fact, the activities of the bounty hunters are sordid, and it is a dangerous occupation in so far as the informer runs the risk of physical injury if his activities are discovered by the criminal, and also the possibility of a charge of being an accessory after the fact, if he is less than frank with the adjuster or the police. Nevertheless, on occasions the bounty hunter serves a useful purpose where the adjuster is concerned.

Third-party claims take up an appreciable part of many adjusters' time. In such cases the adjuster is acting in a quasi-legal capacity for or against a party other than the insured under whose policy the adjuster is appointed. The insured he represents may have been held liable for a loss sustained by a third party, allegedly because of some negligence or lack of care on the part of the insured. Conversely, the adjuster may be exercising subrogation rights against a third party, having settled his insured's loss under the insured's own policy.

In this situation the adjuster does not act impartially, but solely in the interests of the insurers by whom he is appointed. The adjuster's principals do not have any contractual relationship with the outside third party, as they do with their own insured, and the claim therefore has to be dealt with strictly in accordance with legal principles rather than in accordance with the terms and conditions of an insurance contract.

For example, the insured may be a freeholder having his house decorated. If a fire was started by a decorator using a blow-lamp carelessly, the adjuster would first settle the insured's claim for damage to the house by fire under his building policy. Simultaneously he would hold the decorator responsible, on the grounds

Investment Decision

NO MORE GUESSTIMATES

NEW I.C.T. comprehensive computer program brings new accuracy to Net Cash Flow calculations: uses sophisticated mathematical techniques to estimate profitability; quantifies risk measurement.

'Two out of three investment decisions are based on the wrong data'—say two recent official reports*. To help management make the right investment decisions, I.C.T. introduce PROP (Profit Rating Of Projects), a new program for 1900 Series computers. Here's what it does:

1. Considers all factors — Government grants, corporation tax, time periods—and calculates Net Cash Flow.

2. Offers a full range of techniques for profit evaluation—for any time period—including new dual-rate Discounted Cash Flow.

3. Cuts out guesswork by providing comprehensive risk analysis (in clear graph form). The program shows the range of profit expectation; probabilities of different profit values in the range; percentage probabilities of different rates; cumulative probability of achieving or exceeding given rates.

of negligence, and all being well the adjuster would ultimately recover from the builder's public liability insurers. In such a case the adjuster exercises the right of subrogation which is contained in practically all material loss insurance policies and which entitles the insurer to 'stand in the shoes' of the claimant once the loss has been settled.

The adjuster may find himself acting as either plaintiff or defendant. For example, there was a serious hotel fire at Brighton, and having a branch there, loss adjusters, A & Co, naturally hoped to be instructed to deal with the claim of the hotel owner. However, another firm were instructed. A day or two later, A & Co found that their Brighton branch had been instructed by the public liability insurers of a firm of manufacturers who had been organizing an exhibition in the hotel, and it was being alleged that their activity in the hotel had given rise to the fire. In this case, whilst A & Co were not dealing with the 'direct' loss, they were just as deeply involved. It is not unknown for a single incident to provide work in different capacities for several different firms of adjusters.

It will be apparent from this that the adjuster must on occasion be able to comment on points of law. Frequently he will find himself arguing against a solicitor acting for the other side, or he may have to consult with his principal's own lawyers to decide whether a case should be pressed to its limit. The adjuster has to be a jack-of-all-trades, and it is this, probably above all else, which makes his job so interesting.

Operational Research in Business – II

PART III. SOME DEVELOPING PROBLEM AREAS

ALTHOUGH operational research had its initial period of growth on military problems during the war, it has subsequently tended to be concerned mainly with production and transportation problems. A glance through any standard textbook on operational research will provide justification for this statement. During the last few years, however, a number of workers have made attempts to break out of this web and enter into broader fields of business strategy. Despite the apparent attractiveness of general business operations – as opposed to the physical problems of manufacturing – for operational research investigations, relatively few workers have been active in this field, and few successful applications of operational research studies in depth have been published from these fields. No doubt this is partly due to security, but a study of membership lists, etc., suggests that a relatively low proportion of operational research workers are working in this sphere.

In this section six of the more recently activated fields of investigation are mentioned and some published studies outlined.

Social services

Here one must point to work that is being done in the medical field – particularly hospitals – and also in the transport field. In particular much emphasis has been given to the idea of the social value of a development. Three illustrations will be mentioned. Foster and Beesley (1963, 1965)<sup>1</sup> put forward a method for assessing the value of the new Victoria line tube. Originally this work was concerned with estimating the present value of the proposed Victoria line, and they did not concern themselves with how the money was to be raised. Subsequently they included this facet and found that the conditions for the raising of the money affected the social balance. The most interesting point in their work, from the operational research worker's point of view, is probably the methods used to assess social benefit since these arise in a number of studies (and may also be relevant to a general class of problem where 'time saved' has to be evaluated in financial terms). Basically any time savings were valued at 5s per hour for non-working time and 7s 3d per hour for journeys in working time, whilst there was also a benefit factor in the higher chances of getting a seat (comfort and convenience). This kind of calculation raises an interesting point – to whom does the social benefit accrue? Thus, if a railway line is built and saves everybody an hour a day by making it easier to get to and from work, then the community only benefits if the 5s so released goes to the benefit of the community. If this is not so, it should result in the persons concerned, each being willing to accept 5s lower wage, which would have the same result. Similar considerations must arise in assessments of the economics of motorways, assuming no tolls are to be charged. It is worth pointing out that there are further dangers in this approach unless all projects are considered in the same way. If this is not done there is the possibility that the value of one project includes this concept, whereas the cost of a concomitant part of it excludes it. The physical effort required in the raising of taxes to pay for a motorway could be a case in point.

Another study is that by Moser and Layard (1964)<sup>2</sup> as part of the Robbins investigation into higher education, Parts III and IV, slightly abridged, of a paper presented to the Institute of Actuaries on March 20th. Parts I and II appeared in last week's issue.

where the planning of the scale of higher education is discussed. Here they consider means of forecasting (an area that statisticians, economists and operational research workers are all falling over each other to claim as their own, although it was unloved by all until a few years ago), either by projecting the numbers able to benefit from higher education – a demographic approach – or else by considering future manpower needs. The latter approach was rejected for practical purposes owing to lack of reliable information and the former approach was accordingly developed in detail. The report highlights the statistical problems involved, particularly the need for numerous surveys owing to information being currently collected piecemeal so that no comprehensive picture was obtained. But the very existence of the forecasts seems to pose certain dilemmas for those who act upon the forecasts. They introduce rigidity into the system of development and they automatically rule out any form of financial self-adjustment in that the finance is mainly from the Government. Briefly, in the application of the forecasts an adaptive control system is lacking – a point discussed further in Part IV.

This concept of feed-back is inherent in the systematic study of many national problems. Consider, for example, the problem of running a health service. Individual doctors have problems in organizing their practices and some operational research has been done to find out how the work of the general practitioner may be facilitated. Yet such work must be circumscribed by the general practitioner's own authority and responsibility. It has been found hard in practice to integrate what happens to the doctor's patients when they are referred to hospitals and specialist consultants with the general practitioner himself. A further, and virtually uncoupled, system links the pharmaceutical world with that of the doctors and patients. Projects have been undertaken on the ward organization, on the out-patients' departmental organization and on the flow of information within the hospital. But, in general, few studies have been made on the organization of the hospital system as a whole, nor as yet on the health service as a whole. The time seems ripe for such studies and, assuming that a worth-while model of the system can be built, simulation techniques could help to reveal the relationship between policies and desired effects and hence throw valuable light upon the optimal allocation of limited funds.

Marketing

The marketing of any product is a complex operation involving many different activities, such as advertising, sales promotion, pricing strategies, distribution, display, and packaging. A number of theoretical studies of the interactions between groups of variables which are used to control and evaluate marketing performances have been made. Magee (1953)<sup>3</sup> has investigated the effect of promotional effort on sales for a firm which markets a branded product to a large number of retailers. The particular firm's policy was to apply promotional effort to about 40 per cent of their dealers at any one time. However, historical data had been accumulated of instances when effort was applied to 100 per cent of the dealers. Under certain assumptions about a dealer's behaviour (namely, that the number of cases of the product ordered by a dealer in one month follows a Poisson distribution about that dealer's average or 'characteristic' order – an assumption which seems to fit available data very closely), a frequency distribution for average monthly order size of dealers was obtained. Since this distribution was obtained from instances when effort was applied to all dealers, a comparison with a distribution of average order size under normal conditions (only 40 per cent promoted) for the dealers not normally promoted yields a measure of the increased business which can be obtained by promoting a dealer.

Marketing executives will often rate the performance of a product in a test as good, in spite of the fact that money was lost on the test (i.e. expenditure on advertising, distribution, etc., exceeds the profit from sales). This reflects their judgement that the area under consideration is penetrable for the product in spite of what might be superficially discouraging results. King (1963, 1964)<sup>4</sup> has devised a method by which the considered judgements of marketing experts on a small sample of test areas may be used to generate a simple decision rule as to whether the product tested should be marketed in other areas. King then shows, under certain strong assumptions, that a discriminant function estimated from the various samples provides a means of classifying, and indeed of ranking, potential market areas for the product in such a way that expected costs of misclassification are minimized. The discriminant is a linear function of the variables considered, and the coefficients are easily calculated. New areas will be classified as penetrable or impenetrable according as they yield positive or negative values of the discriminant, and if one area yields a higher value than another, the former will be considered more likely to be penetrable. The foregoing method was applied to a particular product and found to yield correct predictions in all but 5 per cent of the areas tried.

The use of subjective probabilities in Bayesian methods has justifiably attracted many supporters in all branches of operational research in the last few years, since it provides a comprehensive framework for dealing with uncertainty in a rational way. Such thinking can be translated to marketing decision problems and is discussed by Green (1963)<sup>5</sup> in a paper on pricing strategies. The firm concerned was considering four alternative pricing strategies in an effort to increase its profits on a particular product over the ensuing five years. The criterion used for deciding between these alternatives was the maximum expected compounded value at the five-year horizon of all profits on the product. A complex decision tree was constructed to represent all the possible consequences of each pricing strategy in terms of their effects on the potential market for the product type, the proportion of the market for the product type actually attained, the reactions of competitors in their pricing strategies, the subsequent effects of these changes, etc. By assigning conditional branching probabilities at each node of the tree, a task which was clearly arduous, the probabilities of each eventual outcome of the alternative strategies was calculated. The summation of the values of these outcomes, weighted by their probabilities conditional on each strategy, made it possible to determine the optimal strategy. An analysis of the sensitivity of the result to changes in certain of the input parameters, such as the compounding rate, then gave a good idea of robustness of the model.

Now that high-speed computers make it possible to obtain results cheaply for large numbers of alternative sets of parameters, it seems that the use of subjective probabilities will gain greater favour, and Green's example generalizes readily to a multitude of decision problems in marketing and elsewhere. Broadly speaking, the expected value of new information is the difference between the expected pay-off associated with taking the best action in the absence of the new information and the expected value of the best strategy involved when the new information is allowed for. The expected net gain from the information is then the expected value of the information less the cost of getting it. If the net gain is positive, it is worth while for the decision-maker to 'purchase' the additional information. Furthermore, superficial relationships between the tentative results of an operational research study and some part of the body of scientific knowledge, thrown up by such computer searches, can often suggest hypotheses about the detailed workings of the system under discussion, which may in turn lead to new and un hoped-for results about the operation of the system as a whole.

A market can be viewed in two distinct ways: firstly, as a collection of individuals each subject to certain stimuli and reacting in particular ways, and secondly, as a whole system reacting in some general manner to trends and influences. This continual exchange between macro- and micro-viewpoints is common to many of the physical and behavioural sciences, and probably accounts for the many successful approaches to market analysis through the sciences. A number of studies in the advertising field have been made. J. Maitland and K. Pennycuik, in an unpublished report, have examined the results of Press advertising for the recruitment of Metropolitan policemen. The objective was to investigate the response to advertisements in different media with a view to improving the effectiveness of the recruiting procedure. A model was formulated which involved a newspaper impact factor, a district coverage factor and a third factor which was related to the combined effect of a newspaper as a whole and the advertising effort displayed in it. By estimating these factors from available data, it is shown how linear programming can be used to decide upon the optimum advertising policy to pursue, subject to the constraint of a budget and also in the maximum number of advertisements to appear in any one paper. Beale et al. (1966)<sup>6</sup> have described an alternative approach to the media scheduling problem, where television as well as the Press was included. They give an interesting discussion of how they attempted to estimate the overlap effect between these two types of media. The results were used to gauge the effects of making known changes in a planned television and Press campaign with a view to finding the optimum allocation of the funds available.

Business strategy and risk

On the whole, severe limitations have been found in the immediate use of operational research in the field of general business strategy and this has come about because of four main avenues of difficulty:

- (a) the finding of an analytically useful way of describing an organization;
- (b) the building of a model that considers explicitly both the organizational structure and the implementation of 'optimal' decision rules;
- (c) the prediction of the behaviour of other competing and conflicting organizations within the environment;
- (d) the rational managing of an organization from the point of view of the manager.

As a guide to activities it is worth while to refer in a little more depth to some studies that have been made in the general financial investment area. First, it is necessary to mention the treatment of the investment problem under conditions of uncertainty. To fix ideas, suppose that a business man is faced with choosing between two alternative capital investments A or B, each involving the same capital outlay. Assume that the prior probabilities of various yields on the capital invested for the two projects are assessed to be as shown in Figure 1. Which is the better investment to make? If the most probable values are compared, then project B should be selected. If the expected values of the projects are compared, then A is the better choice, whilst if the minimax solution of minimizing the maximum loss (or in this case the maximum solution of maximizing the minimum gain) is followed then B is again the best choice. It is sometimes argued that probability theory is no guide to rational decision-making in business. The argument is that, even where the probabilities of the various outcomes associated with a particular investment decision could be accurately estimated, the company has only one 'trial' at this particular game of chance and the theory of probability is only a useful guide where a large number of trials of the same game of chance are involved. But, assuming the company is making a large number of different and independent investments, a degree of combination is possible. For example, the total expected profit is the sum of the individual project expected profits. Hence if expected profit is the company's overall goal it is legitimate to use the probability approach for the individual decisions, even though the individual projects may show profits very wide of their expected value. Sir Paul Chambers (1966)<sup>7</sup> quoted the following table of differences between actual and expected returns in the first full working year for a random sample of one hundred large capital investment projects:

Difference per cent	Number of projects
0 to $\pm 5$	6
$\pm 5$ to $\pm 10$	11
$\pm 10$ to $\pm 25$	13
$\pm 25$ to $\pm 100$	49
over $\pm 100$	21

The overall range is from  $-220$  per cent to  $+169$  per cent, with an average (whether or not it is a weighted average is not clear) of  $-9.6$  per cent. Sir Paul goes on to state that the aggregate of its profit margins is likely to be smaller than the sum of the individual estimated forecasts product by product. This can, however, only mean that the individual forecasts are expected to be biased. Hence there would seem to be something at fault with the assessment procedures, if the total expected return was the criterion that really mattered. Sir Paul did, in fact, hint at the cause of the discrepancy when he implied that, for assessment purposes, each project was given a unique estimated yield. If this was the mode of a negatively skewed prior probability distribution of yields (as is commonly believed to be the case) the observed mean yield taken over a number of projects will fall below the average of the estimated modal yields, even if the distributions had been accurately estimated in advance.

The allocation of financial resources

Linear programming procedures have been used for the allocation of funds. Briefly, the procedure consists of an attempt to provide a framework in which portfolio managers can quantify risk considerations for a given portfolio. Given the various expected yields, the risk factors, the average term of the investments and the attitude of the investor towards risk or safety, then the optimum division of the sum concerned amongst the component stocks can be made. Classical portfolio analysis explicitly considers only potential earnings; risk or uncertainty is taken into account purely on a subjective basis, i.e. portfolios are diversified by experienced judgement to provide diversification amongst industries, amongst 'growth' stocks, etc. The linear programming approach, however, explicitly copes with the uncertainty problem through risk factors or variances of expected earnings. For each stock in the portfolio two statistical measurements, yield and risk, are derived and used to obtain an optimal set of portfolios, called efficient portfolios, such that for a certain level of risk no portfolio can be constructed from the available investments that yields a higher rate of return. Conversely, the efficient set of portfolios is such that, for a given rate of return, no other portfolios can be found that have less risk. However, it must be noted that the two fundamental inputs of earnings and risks are still subject to a fair amount of subjectivity and it is in this role of input predictor that the investment analyst is indispensable. The mathematical technique of linear programming merely uses these input data and sifts through a large number of possible portfolios in order to select sets of portfolios that have the best chance of achieving the stated investment objectives. Adelson (1965)<sup>8</sup> has analysed the problem of allocating funds between a number of risky projects so that the overall risk from the chosen portfolio of projects is held down to a tolerable level.

Cord (1964)<sup>9</sup> has applied this procedure to capital budgeting problems whilst Farrar (1962)<sup>10</sup> has used the model to discuss the portfolio policies of United States mutual funds. Farrar's model can be written basically as:

$$\begin{aligned}\sum x_i &= 1 \\ x_i &\geq 0 \\ \text{Maximize } \mu - A\sigma^2\end{aligned}$$

where  $x_i$  is the proportion of funds placed on the  $i$ th security,  $\mu$  and  $\sigma$  are the mean and standard deviation of the return from the portfolio,  $A$  is a defined coefficient of risk aversion. Mao and Sarndal (1966)<sup>11</sup> have reformulated the Markowitz methods so that instead of building uncertainty into the probable returns, the decision-maker is forced to assign the probabilities in an explicit way. Statistical decision theory of the Bayesian variety can then be used as a basis for the portfolio selection by choosing that portfolio which maximizes the weighted average of pay-offs, using as weights the a posteriori probabilities of the various possible states of nature. The maximizing function now becomes:

$$\text{Max } p^* (\sum x_i \mu_i - A \sum x_i x_j \sigma_{ij}) + q^* (\sum x_i \mu'_i - A \sum x_i x_j \sigma'_{ij})$$ where  $p^$  ( $q^$ ) is the a posteriori probability of favourable (unfavourable) business conditions,  $\mu_i$  ( $\mu'_i$ ) and  $\sigma_{ii}$  ( $\sigma'_{ii}$ ) are the mean and variance of the return from security  $i$  under favourable (unfavourable) conditions and similarly for the covariance  $\sigma_{ij}$ . The Bayesian solution then reduces to the standard portfolio selection problem, only explicit allowance has been made in the objective function for two states of nature. A similar kind of approach could be used in studying bonus distribution policies when it is necessary to decide upon the rate at which surplus should be released, having regard to expectations of future growth in surplus.

The market versus the firm

Some work has also been done on the development of closer relationships between the mechanisms used by the market to allocate capital between firms and the procedures which the firms' managers use to allocate funds between competing projects. Financial managers are commonly concerned with two aspects of appraisal, neither of which is given prominence in current systems for project selection:

- the effect of each project on published financial results (and not merely on the cash flows) in both the current and the following years;
- the importance in dovetailing projects, so that funds would be released by some projects just as they were required by another.

In respect of (a), managers appear to use several overlapping but distinct criteria and, in particular, the effects that any decisions made will have on various figures derivable from the published accounts. They tend to regard the accounting convention of assigning costs and revenues to the periods judged to give rise to them as defining the rules of a game in which they seek a high score. The second aspect (b) is of great importance to a firm that relies upon internal financing to a large extent for its capital investment. The allocation of funds between current projects then becomes part of a wider problem as to the best use of resources over a number of years.

With regard to (b) some recent work is available. Lorie and Savage (1959)<sup>12</sup> first analysed the problem of choosing a group of investments with maximum present value, where each investment required outlays in two periods and there were constraints on the funds available in both periods. Weingartner (1963, 1966)<sup>13</sup> has used a linear programming formulation to select a sequence of investments over a number of periods making allowance for the interactions between projects, in that they may require the same scarce facilities. Whereas Weingartner was more concerned with the physical constraints and interactions arising in production, D. J. Chambers (unpublished) has extended Weingartner's work to examine the financial considerations in more prominent detail. The model used by Chambers expresses the problem of allocating funds between projects as choosing that pattern of outlays over the planning interval which gives the greatest possible expected present value of the firm to its current shareholders. The allocation at the initial decision date is performed in the light of current expectations of the investment opportunities occurring in each future period, up to a planning horizon. The effect of a specified outlay on each project is estimated not just on the cash flow in each current and subsequent period, but also on gross assets, current assets and current liabilities, and on earnings before and after tax. The programme of allocation is chosen subject to the requirements that income, current ratio and return on assets are not allowed in any period to fall below specified values and a particular dividend policy is specified. This kind of analysis serves to show how a profitable opportunity occurring in a later year casts its shadow forward to affect the current optimal allocation of funds. This leads to consideration of the sensitivity of the programme with regard both to changes in timing or the amounts of the various constituent projects. An example analysed by Chambers suggests that an evaluation of programmes of investment, taking explicit account of interactions between projects, may lead to recommendations on the amount and timing of the firm's borrowing which differ radically from those suggested by an appraisal of the projects on an individual, one at a time, basis.

Behavioural sciences

A further area where more development can be expected is that of human behaviour. Operational research, dealing as it does with problems of organizations, is necessarily concerned with human behaviour to a considerable extent. The tendency has been for operational research to concentrate on the logical and directly controllable variables of any problem, and to ignore the methods by which changes in these variables act on the situation through intermediate, and often nebulous, behavioural factors. Thus it has been perfectly possible for an operational research team to obtain an excellent logical solution to some precisely formulated problem, without knowing how its recommendations can be effectively implemented. It is also quite conceivable that treatments of groups of human beings as simple input-output machines subject to internal randomization (the 'black box' viewpoint) may prove fruitless, since the most important variables may have been unknowingly nailed up inside the black box. Thus an apparently significant correlation between an important external factor and a spurious external variable in sets of data can lead to totally misleading inferences of significant relationships, and even to hypotheses of causality being accepted. Magnificent examples of the folly of indiscriminate statistical inference vie with one another in ingenuity, but the well-known spurious correlation existing between the number of storks wintering in Sweden and the birth-rate in the latter half of the ensuing year in that country provides evidence for a more fanciful hypothesis than most. The phenomenon of spurious correlation is, of course, common to almost all complex systems subjected to statistical analysis.

There has been a fair amount of discussion about operational research and the behavioural sciences. Dutton and Walton (1964)<sup>14</sup> give a critique of operational research approaches based on the premise that operational research often ignores behavioural phenomena which would, if brought to notice, appear to be irrational or intangible. This omission does not, of course, doom a project from the start but it may seriously curtail the value of the findings and their effective implementation. Neglect of behavioural factors may possibly lead to the attaining of the goals of a project at the expense of undesirable effects elsewhere. A new factory layout designed to improve productivity may on paper be destined to succeed spectacularly – assuming that workers can be found to work under the new conditions, which might be more monotonous and less congenial than the old.

PART IV. QUANTITATIVE METHODS IN BUSINESS

The three quantitative disciplines of mathematics, statistics and probability have each existed as separate entities for some hundreds of years. Furthermore they have each, to a considerable extent, developed independently of each other. Mathematics has commonly been regarded as a completely pure subject and its development and application to real problems has been held back by the lack of straightforward computational procedures to deal with the complex mathematical formulations that had been made of the problems concerned. Statistics largely developed through the 'political arithmetic' of past centuries and was looked upon primarily as a means of displaying or summarizing large accumulations of data. Probability had a gambling background and came to be applied to problems of insurance long before its broader applicability was recognized. The marriage of these three subjects, when it did take place in the business world during the years up to the Second World War, was primarily for purposes of descriptive analysis. The aim was to understand behaviour, to explain behaviour, to rationalize behaviour, to predict, etc. In the last twenty-five years a gradual change of emphasis has occurred so that the role of quantitative methods in business is now seen in a more prescriptive light whereby the aim is to consider the goals and what should be done, i.e. the concepts of maximizing, of minimizing, of improving, of optimizing, etc.

A simplified example will make the difference between these two approaches clear. Consider a series of figures giving the motor-car sales for firm X, quarter by quarter over the last five years. The firm asks their analyst to study this series and predict the sales for the next year, quarter by quarter. Someone else then takes the most probable forecast and uses it as a basis for planning. This is an illustration of the descriptive approach. Alternatively the company may consider the decisions it has to make. Possibly it has to decide whether to build a new factory now, or to postpone the decision for one or more years. This requires estimating the probabilities of various levels of demand over the ensuing year, the movement of interest rates, the cost of the plant, the profits, etc., and piecing these together to form an estimated expected profit under the various alternative decisions and then choosing the decision which gives the highest estimated profit. This is an illustration of the prescriptive approach.

It is suggested that there has been a broadly based movement over the past few years from the descriptive to the prescriptive, and that this must affect future developments and applications of the subject. Assuming that this general movement is agreed, it would seem logical to consider a renaming for this area of study. Although it would assuredly be hard to reach any general agreement, some title such as 'Quantitative Decision Analysis' or 'Operational Analysis' would seem to be more appropriate than the present situation, whereby the area of study is variously named generally according to accidents of organization rather than to the subject-matter involved.

Classification of problem areas

Within the general field of decision problems sketched out above, it is possible to attempt some classification according to the types of problem and the techniques available for their solution. A first criterion of classification is into static or dynamic problems (see Table 1). Basically this criterion depends upon whether or not time forms a critical and

Basic classification of areas

	Certainty	Non-certainty
		Risk	Uncertainty
Static	(1)	(3)	(5)
Dynamic	(2)	(4)	(6)

continuing part of the problem. For example, some inventory decisions involve consideration not merely of the correct policy for today, but of providing a working rule to decide upon the correct policy for each succeeding day and to optimize – in some defined manner – over a period of time, taking into account the actual movements in stock and changes in the forecast demands for the future. This would be a dynamic situation, whereas a decision as to whether to build now a 10,000 ton per annum, as opposed to a 12,000 ton per annum, plant, is an example of a static once-for-all situation.

A second criterion of classification is between certainty and non-certainty. In the former the problem is of a strictly deterministic form; in the latter it is not. Thus, the classical form of linear programming problem, viz. the allocation of effort between a number of competing sources, is deterministic (and hence certain) in that the data relating to sources and inputs are completely defined and the outcome of any given allocation can be precisely calculated. Any departure from such definiteness brings the problem into the area of non-certainty. This latter area can be further subdivided into two categories. The category labelled 'risk' is concerned with events having repetitive statistical characteristics whose probabilistic mechanisms are well known and understood, for example, the distribution of the intervals between telephone calls or of the times between successive breakdowns of production machinery. The other category labelled 'uncertainty' is the fuzzier area of non-certainty that arises when, for example, a new product is introduced and market forecasts made. This is not a repetitive, but a once-and-for-all situation. Classical operational research, it should be noted, has been almost exclusively concerned with the columns in Table 1 labelled risk and certainty. Statistics has until recently been concerned primarily with the problems under risk, originally of a static nature, but more recently of a dynamic nature. In the last few years, however, interest has also grown in the problems of the area of uncertainty.

Problem types

Using the numbered classification of Table 1, some typical problems are as follows:

- (1) Resource allocation
Blending of oils
Transporting, allocation and routing
Sequencing in machine shop
- (2) Inventory management
Smoothing of production schedules
Maintenance of equipment
Replacement of capital items
- (3) Assurance premium determination
Queueing problems
Simulation – number of loading bays for a warehouse optimum depth of dredging for a channel planning of an advertisement campaign
- (4) Pricing problems
Bidding policy
Credit evaluation
New product introduction
Forecasting
- (5) Timing and choice of capital investment projects
Analysis of experiments
Choice between alternative situations
Selection of level of market research for launching new product
- (6) Adaptive control systems – for continuous industrial processes for economic situations for investment problems

Problem-solving techniques

The major techniques that are available to the analyst for the various types of problem outlined above are shown in Table 2. Some of these techniques are old, others are relatively new, i.e., linear programming or adaptive control theory. Statistical methods in recent years has tended to work on problems from both the traditional areas in the risk column and the areas involving uncertainty shown in the right-hand column. Classical operational research has tended to work at problems from the left of the table, taking in the columns headed risk and certainty. It is suggested that although there is a tendency to fragment quantitative problems, they can be brought together in the manner shown in Table 2 to demonstrate their relationships.

Implementation

A great deal of emphasis is rightly placed in all operational research courses and books on the necessity for care in problem recognition and problem definition. It is, however, becoming increasingly clear that there is an even more important facet of operational research work in the manner by which the implementation of the results is approached. The basic aim of operational research is to improve on some situation. Hence unless a solution is implemented, little is achieved. There is a fantastic mobility amongst operational research workers. With this mobility has grown an impression that one of the primary causes of the movement is the difficulty operational research workers have found in getting solutions implemented, with the consequential feeling that the grass is greener in the next field.

The communication and persuasion problems which exist between the organization as a whole and the operational research worker within it are the visible signs of the difficulty, but the solution must go far beyond the trivial 'let the manager learn science' or 'let the scientist learn how to sell'. Behind these visible signs lie the twin horns of the politics of the organization and the unconscious thought processes of those within it. To the consciously observing mind of the scientist, a great deal of managerial activity is political, and the reasons given for any action seem rarely to be the real reasons; the latter are almost always unconscious. On the other hand, once a decision has been made, the manager seeks to find perfectly conscious and justifiable reasons why this decision is the best one. These reasons will be contained in statements made to the employees, to the Press, to directors, etc.

The scientist may sometimes abhor what he thinks of as either dishonesty, or at least self-deception, in the managerial decision-making process. But he should have the honesty to realize that his own way of arranging his affairs is basically little different. Indeed, science can be inconsistently proud of the mysteries of its own unconscious life. Science knows very little about its own basic decision-making processes; how new ideas are created, how trends in research effort are established, how a decision to open a new line of attack on a problem is agreed, how the resistance set up to radical ideas is overcome. But once a project is under way, science can call into play all its rational background: objective evidence, mathematical models, experimental design and rigorous analysis.

Much of the discussion about the inter-relationship of science and management is concerned with the comparison of the rational, conscious and apolitical sides of each. Operational research attempts to modify the reasoning and justification processes of management by putting them in the setting of finer and more elaborate models than the manager can usually create by himself. Once the basic political and unconscious decision has been made, management can only be grateful to the scientist who subsequently adds such magnificent strength to the justification process. Thus, if it has been decided on political grounds to build a motorway through part of a city, the authorities are grateful to anyone who sets out to minimize delays on the entrances and exits; they help to provide an excellent justification for the design.

Neither managers nor scientists really want to understand their own unconscious thought processes. Managers refer to these processes as being intuitive or from experience, whilst scientists refer to them as being creative. Managers claim that no one is ever going to be able to put their decision-making effectively on computers; scientists claim that the creative process of genius is eternally a mystery (some would go as far as to say that it possesses a random element). Hence, mutual understanding calls for an intellectual attack upon the mysteries of both management and science. On the side of management it calls for an understanding of the politics of decision-making, and on the side of science it calls for an understanding of the creative process. This call is threatening to both. Yet the scientist must surely feel uncomfortable if he is forced to regard himself as someone who merely finds justifications for managers' decisions. At the same time the manager himself may well feel uncomfortable if he dwells on the thought that a large part of his research support goes into activities that cannot be analysed, and therefore cannot be controlled.

Movement towards this 'mutual understanding' relationship and away from the 'separate function' relationship can take place only slowly and has not yet occurred to any significant extent in the vast bulk of organizations. To achieve it requires a sequence of events:

- (a) progress towards the communication and persuasion types of relationship;
- (b) reduction in the power differential between the researcher and the manager;
- (c) an increase in the consensus of opinion as to the value of mutual co-operation;
- (d) a growth in mutual respect.

Thus the problems of implementation are of great importance to the esteem of all concerned and, furthermore, should be thought about right at the commencement of any study and not left until the end. Impressive solutions to operational research problems are sometimes found, and then left in a non-implemented state, simply because the company concerned does not work in the manner assumed by the solution and could never under any circumstances accept the solution as it stands. The operational research team has raced too quickly through their understanding of the problem, and failed to appreciate the way management thinks and acts in the particular organization concerned.

Future developments

The aim of any business must primarily be to make profits, whilst that of its management is to make decisions and control the enterprise within that aim. The success of management in years past has been largely related to its ability to apply judgement to all facets of a problem simultaneously. This is no longer as practicable as formerly in that many problems are now so complex that it is impossible for one mind to comprehend the full range of possibilities, thus necessitating some formal and systematic approach to rational decision-making.

In recent years management has been inundated with a plethora of experts each claiming to be able to resolve the more intractable of the business's problems – work study, organization and methods, etc. Hence, any claim to provide a management service must be treated with caution and carefully tested. Many disciplines have contributed to the management services' mosaic; mathematics, statistics, probability, economics amongst them, and it would seem desirable that all these subjects should expand their horizon and integrate more fully with each other. Operational research has attempted to supply the necessary integrative force but, in so doing, it has come to a cross-roads in its existence and development. It can either seek to become a global discipline of quantitative decision analysis embracing the subjects outlined in earlier sections, or it can aim to become a specific management service embracing organization problems, behavioural problems as well as work study, mathematics, statistics, etc. If it chooses the former it will find itself overlapping a variety of well-established disciplines, whilst if it chooses the latter it will cease to be moving towards a discipline but towards a vocational subject. In the same way a surveyor is related to the discipline of mathematics, or an engineer is related to a combination of disciplines of mathematics, physics, chemistry, etc. At the moment operational research shows signs of trying to ride both horses simultaneously, but it must decide upon its direction. The interests and activities shown currently by the United Kingdom Society would suggest that it would achieve the most by moving towards the vocational end of the scale. If this is indeed so, a consequence will be that a great deal of careful thought will be required to rationalize the present plethora of courses in operational research in Britain, many of which provide a rag-bag of assorted techniques. If, however, operational research is to become a discipline, it seems that it could do so only by capturing the generalized quantitative decision area, much of which is currently split between the mathematician, the statistician, the economist and the financial analyst.

As a purely personal opinion, this writer feels that the greatest need today is to provide management with a professionally qualified management services 'brain-centre'. For this purpose the operational research worker must regard himself as taking part in a vocational experience which draws in the ideas, tools and methodologies of a large number of disciplines ranging from the relatively imprecise (at present) areas of psychology to the precise idea of mathematics. But in carrying out such an assignment the individual must show himself willing to sacrifice the notion of 'optimality or nothing' which has sometimes plagued operational research. This in turn requires him to refrain from aiming to make one specific recommendation on every problem and to assume the seemingly more modest role of producing relevant information intended to facilitate the manager's own decision-making. The term 'information' is used here in a wide sense to include such concepts as an 'outcome matrix', that is, a display of the outcomes of alternative decisions for alternative contingencies where outcomes may be expressed in terms of multiple criteria. The emphasis would then be on conditional rather than factual information; there would not necessarily be a single criterion, and consequently no unique concept, of optimality. The investigation would provide the manager with a number of 'if – then' statements and manager acceptance might well be considerably enhanced. By such means it would be possible for operational research to provide a valuable service in marrying together the power which can be brought to a problem from various basic disciplines.

Traditionally, disciplines have kept themselves fairly separate and developed individually. It is, however, noteworthy how many people in recent years have acquired membership of more than one learned society. Assuming operational research becomes basically a vocational subject embracing all sides of a management services activity, it is apparent that not every worker within such an activity can know all subjects equally well. Conversely, those workers coming from an individual discipline, whilst specializing in their own discipline must be aware of, and sympathetic to, other parts of the management services spectrum. This suggests that individuals coming through individual disciplines to professional status need to be provided with some formal training in these concomitant areas if they are to be fully effective in management services.

Betterment Levy - V

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

HAVING considered 'full market rent' and 'market value' in the previous article, it is now necessary to consider 'base value' in Case C. As in Case A, base value may be ascertained under Schedule 4 or Schedule 5, whichever is the more favourable to the levy-payer; but in some Case C cases, as will be shown later, base value must be ascertained by reference to a previous disposition under Schedule 5.

To find the base value under Schedule 4 there must first be ascertained what at the date of commencement of the project is the current use value of the 'relevant interest', that is, the assessable interest of the developing owner or freeholder, calculated in accordance with Schedule 6 and on the assumption that planning permission:

- (a) would be granted for any development of the relevant land which does not constitute material development, but
- (b) would not be granted for any development of that land which constitutes material development.

If at the date of commencement of the project, the project is authorized wholly or in part by a planning permission, the current use value of the assessable interest is to be ascertained as if no such planning permission were then in force; and where the development involves a wasting asset the value of the assessable interest, whether that interest is a fee simple or a tenancy, is to be calculated as if the assessable interest were a tenancy expiring when the development is completed, for example, when minerals are worked out. The incumbrances mentioned in paragraphs 18 (2) and 19 of Schedule 4 and any depreciation caused by the development to the owner's interest in other land are to be taken into account.

The base value will then be the aggregate of:

- (a) 11/10ths of the current use value of the relevant interest, and
- (b) the amount by which other land of the developing owner has been depreciated by the carrying out of the project;

but where there is an existing building on the land at the date of commencement of the project and the site of the existing building is not the subject of material development, the addition of one-tenth of current use value to arrive at base value will be confined to the land actually required for the project of material development.

Schedule 5 base value

Schedule 5 base value is ascertained in much the same way as in Case A, but it relates to the assessable interest in each case. Paragraphs 18 to 21 of Schedule 5 contain special provisions for adopting as base value the consideration given for the relevant interest under an enforceable contract in cases where such a contract constitutes an assessable interest. If:

- (a) the consideration to be given under the contract for the purchase of the relevant interest is specified in the contract or is a sum of which the actual amount has been determined before the latest date on which a counter-notice could be served under section 46 (2) objecting to a notice of assessment of levy in respect of the relevant interest; and
- (b) the amount of that consideration exceeds the value which would otherwise be the base value of the relevant interest

then, that amount will be taken to be the base value of the relevant interest (paragraph 20 (1) and (2)). But this rule is modified by paragraph 20 (3) where there is in existence at the date of commencement of the project an enforceable contract under which a prospective tenant can be required to take the tenancy in question.

Expenditure on improvements etc.

The procedure for ascertaining the allowance for expenditure on improvements and ancillary rights, in so far as it has increased the market value of the assessable interest, follows the pattern of Case A.

After a project of development has been begun, a liability to pay compensation in respect of an incumbrance may arise. Paragraph 44 of Schedule 4 provides that for the purpose of assessing levy in Case C the Commission may direct that any expenditure which has been incurred by the developing owner or by his predecessor in title not more than six years after the date of commencement of the project in respect of:

- (a) the acquisition of an easement;
- (b) the release or modification of an easement or a restrictive right; or
- (c) the payment of compensation under section 84 (1) of the Law of Property Act 1925 in connection with the discharge or modification of a restrictive covenant affecting the land shall, to such extent as may be specified in the direction, be taken into account as if it had been incurred on or after July 1st, 1948, but before the date of commencement of the project. If the expenditure does not relate exclusively to the relevant land it is to be apportioned; and if it has already been taken into account in connection with some other 'chargeable act or event' it is to be disallowed. But if a direction is given by the Commission after levy has been paid, and in consequence of the direction the amount of levy payable is less than the amount paid, the Commission must repay the excess.

Credit carried forward

Where the development does not constitute full development, it may happen that the market value of the land for the purpose of the development being carried out is less than the price the developer has paid for the land (that is, the Schedule 5 base value), plus improvements. For example, a building bought for redevelopment as shops may be used for office purposes pending redevelopment. Normally, negative net development values are of no consequence in the Act and are treated as nil values, but in the situation above referred to (and in two other situations which will be dealt with later) the negative net development value is recognized by Schedule 11.

Paragraph 2 of Schedule 11 states that for the purpose of assessing levy in respect of a 'subsequent chargeable act or event' credit shall be taken to have arisen from a 'previous chargeable act or event' where the previous chargeable act or event consisted of the commencement of a project of material development in respect of which notice was served under section 38, section 66 (3) (b) or section 68 and, for the purpose of assessing levy in respect of an assessable interest in the land, or part of the land, comprised in the project:

- (a) paragraph 7 or paragraph 20 of Schedule 5 had effect; and
- (b) the base value of that interest, ascertained in accordance with paragraph 7 or paragraph 20, as the case may be, together with any allowable expenditure on improvements and ancillary rights exceeded the market value of that interest.

Paragraph 7 of Schedule 5 is the provision whereby the consideration for the last relevant disposition may be treated as the base value, while paragraph 20 contains the rule for arriving at the consideration to be given under an enforceable contract.

Paragraphs 8 and 9 of Schedule 11 contain the rules for carrying credit forward in Case C (and Case A). Paragraph 8 applies where the first 'subsequent chargeable act or event' falls within Case A or Case C and, for the purpose of assessing levy in respect of it, the relevant interest has net development value. Three different situations then arise:

If the amount of the net development value is greater than the credit, then:

- (a) the net development value of the relevant interest will be reduced by the credit, and
- (b) the credit will thereupon be taken to be extinguished;

If the amount of the net development value is equal to the credit

- (a) the relevant interest will be treated as having no net development value, and
- (b) the credit will again be taken to be extinguished;

If the amount of the net development value is less than the credit

- (a) the relevant interest will be treated as having no net development value, and
- (b) the credit will be reduced by the amount of the net development value.

Paragraph 9 applies similar rules where the first subsequent chargeable act or event consists of a disposition granting a tenancy.

Related tenancies

It is necessary to give to the chargeable owner the benefit of the cost to him of any development value which he has paid for during the 'antecedent period' (below) or on or after April 6th, 1967, in respect of a tenancy which has been granted or assigned to him and which became merged into the chargeable interest before the relevant date for assessment of levy. This is done by means of an addition to the base value under Schedule 4 or Schedule 5 as the case may be. Just as a normal Schedule 5 base value ensures that allowance is made for development value paid for in the last relevant disposition of the chargeable interest, the related tenancy provisions in Part III of Schedule 5 ensure that allowance is made in respect of development value paid for in acquiring the interest that has been charged.

Paragraph 2 (2) of Schedule 5 defines a 'disposition falling within the antecedent period' as meaning a disposition which either

- (a) was made within the period beginning on July 1st, 1948, and ending with September 22nd, 1965, or
- (b) was made after the end of that period but before April 6th, 1967, and was so made in pursuance of an enforceable contract made before the end of that period, other than a contract granting an option which was not exercised before the end of that period.

'Antecedent period' is to be construed accordingly.

A simple example of a related tenancy is that of a freehold reversioner who takes an assignment of his tenant's interest for valuable consideration and thus becomes the owner of the fee simple in possession because the assigned tenancy merges into the freehold.

When such a transaction takes place after April 6th, 1967, that part of the consideration for the assigned interest which is attributable to development value in that interest is to be added to and becomes part of base value; and if the transaction took place during the antecedent period the whole of the consideration is to be added to the base value. This procedure is favourable to the chargeable owner and avoids the necessity of finding the current use value of the assigned interest at some date between July 1st, 1948, and September 22nd, 1965.

Paragraph 32 of Schedule 5 applies where a related tenancy is assigned on or after the 'relevant date', that is, the date on which the carrying out of the relevant project is begun. The paragraph has effect for the purpose of assessing levy in Case C where

(a) by a disposition made for valuable consideration on or after, but not more than six years after, the relevant date a tenancy which was subsisting on the relevant date is assigned to the chargeable owner and thereupon merges in the chargeable interest, and

(b) that assignment constitutes a chargeable act or event which is notified to the Commission.

In such event, if the assignment is notified to the Commission after a notice of assessment of levy in Case C has been served and has resulted in an operative assessment of levy, any person who has paid or would be liable to pay levy in accordance with the assessment, may make a written application to the Commission for relief, and the Commission must give by way of repayment or otherwise such relief as is appropriate in the circumstances.

Examples in Case C

1. In 1960 X took a full repairing lease of a building used as a warehouse from Y for a term of thirty years. He paid a premium of £5,000 and a rent of £3,000 per annum for the first ten years and £5,000 per annum for the remainder of the term. Y had owned the freehold since before July 1st, 1948. In 1970 X obtained planning permission to convert the warehouse into ground floor shops with offices above. The full market rent of the warehouse before conversion into shops and offices but with the benefit of planning permission is taken to be £8,000 per annum. Its current use value is the same as the rent under the lease, namely, £5,000 per annum.

A. Assessable interest of the developing owner X	£	£	£
Market value of relevant interest – full market rent		8,000
Less rent payable for 30 – 10 = 20 years under lease ..		5,000
Capital value, say .. ..		3,000
		24,000	24,000
Schedule 4 base value
As there is no 'profit rent' for current use and no severance depreciation to adjoining land, this is NIL ..		—	—
Schedule 5 base value
X paid a premium of £5,000 for his lease during the 'antecedent period' ( supra ), and this amount therefore qualifies as the consideration for the last relevant disposition.		5,000
The Schedule 5 base value being to the levy-payer's advantage, this is adopted		5,000	5,000
		<hr/>

There is no expenditure on improvements or ancillary rights, so that the net development value is ..	£	£	£ 19,000

B. Assessable interest of freeholder Y

Market value of relevant interest is:

(a) Rent receivable for 20 years under lease ..		5,000
Capital value, say ..		40,000	40,000
(b) Reversion to full market rent in perpetuity after 20 years .. ..		8,000
Present capital value, say .. ..		24,000	24,000

Schedule 4 base value

(a) Rent for 20 years of lease .. ..	5,000
Capital value, say ..		40,000
(b) Reversion to current use value .. ..	5,000
Capital value, say ..		15,000
*Add one-tenth ..		1,500
		<hr/>	56,500

Net development value ..		<hr/>	£7,500

* Strictly, only the reversionary portion of the base value qualifies for the addition of one-tenth, as provided by the Betterment Levy (Tenancies and Reversions) Regulations 1967 (S.I. 1967, No. 298) which also contain provisions relating to Schedule 4 and Schedule 5 base values, and are generally both lengthy and complicated.

2. In 1930 X purchased a number of small houses. In 1960 these houses were demolished and the site (A) was cleared. In 1970 X purchased for £5,000 the freehold of an adjoining cleared site (B) which had also been previously occupied by houses, and obtained planning permission to build an industrial building on the composite site. There was no unexpended balance of development value on any of the land, and the project of material development was notified to the Commission to begin on January 1st, 1971. The following are the relevant values:

(a) the full market rent on lease for 99 years of the whole of the land at the date of commencement of the project is .. ..	900 p.a.
(b) the current use value for residential purposes of the whole of the land is .. ..	6,500
(c) the current use value for residential purposes of site A is .. ..		3,000
(d) the current use value for residential purposes of site B is .. ..		2,250
(e) the current use value for residential purposes of site B as found at the date of the last relevant disposition is .. ..		1,900

Market value	£	£	(ii) Schedule 4 base value of site B	£	£
Right to receive full market rent in perpetuity .. .. .	900		Current use value for residential purposes .. .. .	2,250
Capital value, say .. .. .	18,000	18,000	Add one-tenth .. .. .	225
Schedule 4 base value
Current use value for residential purposes .. .. .	6,500			2,475
Add one-tenth .. .. .	650
	7,150		(iii) Schedule 4 base value of site A
			Current use value for residential purposes .. .. .	3,000
			Add one-tenth .. .. .	300
Composite base value
There is no relevant disposition relating to the whole of the land, but there is a relevant disposition relating to site B. Paragraph 18 of Schedule 6 (to be discussed later) is therefore applicable
(i) Schedule 5 base value for site B			As (i) is greater than (ii); and (i) plus (iii) is greater than the Schedule 4 base value of the whole of the land, adopt (i) plus (iii) as the composite base value, that is, £5,350 plus £3,300 equals £8,650 .. .. .	8,650
Consideration given for site .. .. .	5,000
Adjust for change in current use value
Current use value at relevant date .. .. .	2,250
Current use value at date of last relevant disposition .. .. .	1,900
	350		No expenditure on improvements .. .. .
	5,350		Net development value .. .. .	£9,350

Wednesday, May 10th, 1967, at 10.30 a.m. The meeting will be followed by business sessions at which the subjects and speakers will be:

Professional Standards Committee

The Council approved the appointment of a new standing committee entitled 'Professional Standards Committee'.

The work of the Professional Standards Committee, which has no disciplinary powers, will be to draw to the attention of members, and to invite their comments on, apparent departures from 'best practice' or statutory requirements; to advise or otherwise help members who through illness or other reasons are unable to keep abreast of their work or who have problems involving professional standards.

Post-qualifying Instruction ad hoc Committee

The Council decided that a full appraisal should be made of the future of the Institute's instructional courses and of post-qualifying instruction as a whole. It has accordingly appointed an ad hoc committee for this purpose with the following membership:

Messrs A. H. Walton, Chairman, J. W. G. Frith, W. R. McBrien, B. A. Maynard, E. C. Meade, K. J. Sharp, H. Gordon Smith, E. L. S. Weiss, E. K. Wright.

The committee will consider whether post-qualifying instruction should continue to be provided for members and if necessary, extended:

(i) by promoting post-qualifying diplomas, such as the Certificate in Management Information, to enable members to specialize;

- (ii) by arranging courses, not leading to examinations, designed to improve members' efficiency and keep them up to date with modern techniques.

If the committee decides that post-qualifying diplomas should be promoted it will consider in what fields and in what depth instruction should be provided and what examinations and practical experience should be required.

The terms of reference of the committee will also include consideration as to whether instructional courses should be provided at the Institute's headquarters, by district societies or by outside educational establishments.

Internal Services Committee

Remuneration of Liquidators

The Council approved the issue of the following statement for the guidance of members on the correct practice to be followed in regard to the remuneration of liquidators:

The Council wishes to remind members who act as liquidators or trustees that they should not make any arrangements whereby their remuneration is shared with representatives of creditors or with any person other than their partners.

[This does not preclude payment for professional services rendered to liquidators or trustees: such payments should, however, be previously approved by the Committee of Inspection, or if no Committee of Inspection, then by the creditors, and shown separately in the accounts including those submitted to the Board of Trade.

Selective Employment Payments Act 1966

It was reported that information had been received from the Ministry of Labour that local offices of the Ministry had been advised that negotiations over repayment claims or over registration under the Selective Employment Payments Act may properly be conducted with accountants acting on behalf of clients.

U.E.C.

It was reported that twelve guests from member-organizations of U.E.C. had attended the Institute's dinner at The Drapers' Hall on Wednesday, March 1st, 1967. On the same evening Lady Benson entertained their ladies to dinner followed by a visit to the Opera. The guests and their ladies were received by the President at a reception held at The Dorchester after the conclusion of the Institute dinner and the Opera.

Associated Trusts

The Council approved for publication a report on funds associated with the Institute. A booklet entitled Associated Trusts - Report and Accounts 1966 is available to members without charge on application to the offices of the Institute.

Registration of Articles

The Secretary reported the registration of 190 articles of clerkship during February 1967, the total number since January 1st, 1967, being 394. In February 1966, 200 articles of clerkship were registered.

Sir Geoffrey Eley reports

- After bearing considerably heavier interest and depreciation charges, Group Profit before tax amounted to £7,162,000 compared with £7,154,000 in 1965. Turnover constituted a new record of £129,531,000 — up 11%.
- Cash generation improved in 1966, compared with 1965. Tillings are not short of funds for profitable expansion. Some £9,000,000 was invested last year in developing our existing interests.
- The Tilling policy of allowing our members a high degree of freedom has continued to prove attractive to potential newcomers, and has justified itself in results.
- British industry cannot for more than a short period support the present level of taxation — both on companies and individuals — without grave risk of harm to the economy. Unless some aspects of the tax system are amended fairly soon, the "Brain Drain" will merge into an even more alarming "Outflow of the Enterprising".

FINDINGS AND DECISIONS OF THE DISCIPLINARY COMMITTEE

Findings and Decisions of the Disciplinary Committee of the Council of the Institute at hearings held on February 17th, 1967

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that Denis Lithgow, a fellow of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, had been guilty of acts or defaults discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of clause 21 sub-clause (3) of the supplemental Royal Charter in that he was at a Magistrates Court in Canada on October 26th, 1966, convicted of two charges (a) for that he between June 1st and December 1st, 1965, not being a licensed trustee did unlawfully represent himself to be a licensed trustee. Contrary to section 160-a of the Bankruptcy Act, Chapter 14 Revised Statutes of Canada and was ordered to forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000 (b) for that he did between July 21st and September 11th, 1965, unlawfully by deceit, falsehood or other fraudulent means defraud a certain person of three hundred and seventy-two dollars and fifty cents ($372.50). Contrary to section 323-1 of the Criminal Code of Canada and was ordered to be imprisoned for one day and in addition to forfeit and pay the sum of $1,000, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee found that the formal complaint against Denis Lithgow, F.C.A., had been proved under both headings, and the Committee ordered that Denis Lithgow, F.C.A., of RR 1, Beamsville, Ontario, Canada, be excluded from membership of the Institute.

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that a fellow of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales had been guilty of acts or defaults discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of clause 21 sub-clause (3) of the supplemental Royal Charter in that he failed within a reasonable time to answer or take any action in response to repeated requests from the solicitors for a deceased person for certain tax deduction certificates and for particulars of an annuity of which the said person had been in receipt, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee found that the formal complaint had been proved and the Committee ordered that the member be reprimanded but considered that there existed special circumstances justifying the omission of his name from the publication of the Finding and Decision.

A formal complaint was preferred by the Investigation Committee of the Council of the Institute to the Disciplinary Committee of the Council that Michael George Hocknell, an associate of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, had been guilty of acts or defaults discreditable to a member of the Institute within the meaning of clause 21 sub-clause (3) of the supplemental Royal Charter in that being the liquidator of a limited company he failed within a reasonable time to answer enquiries made to him by a bank acting on behalf of two of the creditors of the said company, so as to render himself liable to be excluded or suspended from membership of the Institute or to be reprimanded or admonished. The Committee found that the formal complaint against Michael George Hocknell, A.C.A., had been proved and the Committee ordered that Michael George Hocknell, A.C.A., of 172 Douglas Road, Surbiton, Surrey, be reprimanded.

Regulation of the Profession

THE Netherlands Secretary of State for Economic Affairs has appointed Mr A. F. Tempelaar, President of the Nederlands Instituut van Accountants, to be acting President of the new State-ordained Nederlands Instituut van Registered Accountants (N.I.V.R.A.). Mr Tempelaar will be responsible for organizing, convening and presiding over the first meeting of members of the new body to be held on April 28th. The purpose of the meeting is to determine the number of, and elect, the members of the Council and to appoint a President, Deputy President and eight members constituting a Board of Appeal.

The N.I.V.R.A. has been established under the Dutch Law on Registered Accountants which came into effect on March 6th to regulate the accountancy profession in the Netherlands, and in due course to assume all functions of a professional body, i.e. professional education and training, examinations, admission and registration of members of the profession, regulation of professional activities and disciplinary jurisdiction.

Under the new measure, the existing professional bodies – the Nederlands Instituut van Accountants (N.I.V.A.); the Vereniging van Academisch Gevormde Accountants (V.A.G.A.); the Nederlandse Broederschap van Accountants, and the Nederlandse Unie van Accountants – will eventually disappear – probably some time after 1970 when the last examinations of the Netherlands Institute will be held. Members of the existing bodies do not automatically become registered accountants: each member has to apply individually for admission to the State register. Some two thousand four hundred and fifty accountants have been provisionally admitted to the register to date.

UNITED STATES

Dual Practice of Accounting and Law

IN a report in The Journal of Accountancy on the dual practice of accounting and law in the United States, the co-chairmen of the National Conference of Lawyers and Certified Public Accountants stated that there are about 280,000 lawyers and 90,000 C.P.A.s in the United States, of whom perhaps 2,000 or 3,000 are dual practitioners. Conferment of the legal right to practise was a Government function exercised separately in each State and in the District of Columbia. Admission to the Bar was a judicial function exercised by the highest courts in each jurisdiction, through boards of Bar examiners. A certificate to practise accounting was a legislative and executive function, with examinations by State boards of examiners in accounting. The requirements were the minimum for beginners in practice and not the maximum, or even the average which the public was entitled to expect from experienced practitioners.

The public looked to the American Institute of C.P.A.s and the American Bar Association, and their State counterparts, for adequate professional and ethical standards, and it expected them to promote the highest attainable level of competence. The chairmen questioned which was the primary concern: the individual's right to practise under his two licences, or the public's interest and its right to rely on all the necessary competence and skill. They concluded that this question needed to be answered clearly and plainly by the related State organizations.

SOUTH AFRICA

Work and Save Budget

PRESENTING his Budget for 1967 at the end of March, Dr Diedrichs, who recently succeeded Dr Dönges as Minister of Finance, soon disclosed that his policy was to continue the anti-inflationary drive of his predecessor. In his opening remarks, the Minister emphasized that 1966 was another exceptionally good year for the South African economy, although continuing inflation was admittedly an undesirable feature. But against this, however, in 1966 as in 1965, the real gross domestic product increased by no less than about 5½ per cent, and prosperity, full employment and buoyant business conditions continued to exist in virtually every sector of the economy. There was also a substantial surplus on the balance of payments.

There was an expected net surplus on Revenue Account for the year of R31.5 million (£15½ million), but the Minister claimed that to use this surplus and those from other sources for expenditure in the next financial year would be inflationary under present conditions. He therefore announced his intention of sterilizing these surpluses by keeping them in the Reserve Bank or by temporarily investing them, interest free, in the External Procurements Fund in order to reduce the interest burden on the latter.

Tax reliefs and concessions

Various measures of relief include:

Pensioners: the increasing of the R2 monthly bonus to R3; with children's and settlers' allowances adjusted accordingly; and the additional allowance to war veterans increased by R1 per month. The value of assets disregarded in applying the means test to pensioners has been increased from R2,400 to R3,000 for those under 70; and R4,800 for those above that age. Supplementary allowances to Civil Service and railway pensioners are also increased by R.1 per month.

University Students: The child's rebate at present claimable in respect of full-time university students up to the age of 24 years is to be extended to the age of 26.

Confinement Allowance: An additional rebate of R8 (£4) on account of confinement expenses in the year in which a child is born, coupled with an increase of the maximum deduction for medical expenses in that year from R200 to R300.

Exporters' Allowance: The allowance to exporters in respect of expenditure incurred in the development of export markets increased by 12½ per cent.

Farmers: By a new system designed to level out the fat and the thin years, farmers' tax assessments will be based on their average income over the current and four preceding years.

Estate Duty: To encourage saving, the value of life assurance policies, Government securities and Land Bank debentures deductible in determining the duty on a deceased's estate has been increased from R15,000 (£7,500) to R25,000 (£12,500).

Taxation measures

The brunt of the weight of new taxation to raise the additional revenue required has fallen on the shoulders of the middle and upper class income groups and on companies. The new measures include:

Income Tax on individuals: Loan Savings Levy is trebled from 5 per cent to 15 per cent of the basic tax of all individuals who are liable for central government income tax of R100 or more.

Company Tax: Companies will now pay 40 per cent of taxable income instead of 35 per cent; of this 40 per cent 36½ per cent will be tax and 3½ per cent will be loan levy.

Gold and Diamond Mining Companies: A further loan levy of 5 per cent.

Non-resident Shareholders' Tax: This tax formerly stood at 7½ per cent but was raised to 10 per cent last year. It has now again been increased to 15 per cent.

Tax on interest paid to foreigners: Interest on loans concluded outside the Republic has been regarded as derived from outside the Republic and therefore not liable to South African income tax; on the other hand, the South African borrower may deduct such interest paid from his taxable income. This position is now considered to be inequitable and it is felt that foreigners drawing interest from loans employed in South Africa should make a contribution to the Exchequer. Accordingly, a new tax of 10 per cent on interest paid to non-residents has been introduced with immediate effect.

New motor-cars: An increase of 20 per lb. in excise duty and 5 per cent ad valorem in customs duty on new motor-cars. The increase amounts to R40 (£20) for a light car and R60 (£30) for a medium car and takes effect immediately.

Concluding his Budget speech, the Minister said, 'The battle against inflation continues, but with the watchword "Work and Save" we shall achieve victory'.

Finance and Commerce

Associated Fisheries

THE Associated Fisheries group, from which this week's reprint is taken, has been through the mill lately. Last year the company was faced with a take-over bid by Ross Group and, as is usual under such circumstances, was obliged to announce profit and dividend forecasts which ordinarily would not have been made. The take-over was eventually ruled out of Court by the Monopolies Commission.

Then came a clash in the boardroom with Mr Avison Wormald who, as The Rt Hon. Michael Noble, M.P., the present chairman of the company, puts it, 'ceased to be chief executive of the company'. Mr Wormald has lately resigned as a director without prejudicing his claim against the company in respect of the termination of his employment. Another blow to the company was the death last November of Lord Fraser of Allander who had been chairman since January 1961.

On the operational side of the group, trawling – which accounts for the bulk of earnings – was showing a 21 per cent rise in profits in the first eight months of the financial year; but then catching rates fell in the distant water trawling sphere, prices were hit by abnormally good North Sea catches and, from the beginning of June until the end of September, no trawling profits were made.

To add to these problems there was an excess in world markets of frozen fish. Prices of distant water fish fell by 10 per cent.

Worse still

What this meant in terms of 1965–66 overall profits is shown in the accounts, and more particularly in the summary of group turnover and trading profit which is included in the reprint. Trawling and port wholesaling profits are shown to be £½ million down despite a £1.3 million rise in turnover.

At the same time that shareholders received this full report on 1965–66 operations, they also received a first quarter report on 1966–67 showing that, far from improving, the trawling position had worsened still further in the three months to the end of December. Estimated group net pretax profits for that quarter were £81,224 against a comparable 1965 figure of £395,382. The fall in profits was again due entirely to the decline in the profitability of trawling.

The point was made in the quarterly report that results of any one quarter in isolation are not necessarily indicative of any particular trend, although it was added a shade ruefully that 'the current situation in distant water trawling

There is a claim by Mr. Avson Wormald against the Company for damages following the termination of his appointment as Chief Executive. Mr. Wormald claims approximately £50,000 in respect of loss of salary (subject, however, to mitigation for any alternative employment obtained or likely to be obtained) and an unspecified sum for diminution in pension benefits. The company is contesting liability and therefore no provision has been made in these Accounts for any such claim.

2. TAXATION

—based on the profits of the year amounts to £330,362 and is reduced by £17,000 (1965: £55,000) for past losses including Capital Allowances and by £152,000 (1965: £270,000) for Investment Allowances. Corporation Tax is calculated at the rate of 40% (1965: 35%).

In arriving at the charges for taxation on profits shown in the Consolidated Profit and Loss Account, the companies in the Group have taken account of Depreciation provided in the accounts in place of Capital Allowances (other than Investment allowances) on properties, trawlers, plant, etc., which will be claimed for taxation purposes. The difference between the taxation charges so calculated and the taxation liabilities based on the profits for the year has been transferred to Corporation Tax Equalisation Account. The large sum so transferred for the year to 30th September 1966 arises mainly from the claiming of additional taxation allowances on new trawlers under the provisions of Section 14, Finance Act 1965.

Each holder of the Stock shall have the right in 1971, 1972 and 1973 to convert any or every £2 of Loan Stock into one fully paid Ordinary Stock Unit of 5s. in the Parent Company and £1 of non-convertible 7½% Unsecured Loan Stock. Any 7½% Loan Stock not previously redeemed or converted will be finally repayable at par on 31st January 1966.

10. PROVISION FOR TRAWLER REPAIRS

Provisions for trawler repairs at 30th September 1966 are shown in the Consolidated Balance Sheet after deduction of anticipated relief for Corporation Tax on the accumulated gross provisions provided for in the Accounts but only allowable for taxation when the expenditure is incurred.

11. INVESTMENT GRANTS

The amount receivable in respect of Investment Grants for the period ended 30th September 1966 is estimated at £13,830 and has been deducted in arriving at the net cost of the relevant Fixed Assets in the Balance Sheet. Provisions for depreciation have been calculated on the net cost of the Fixed Assets after deducting Investment Grants.

12. LOANS

The amount of £1,200,000 represents the balance of the cash consideration of £3,000,000 in respect of the sale to Fropax Ltd. of the shares in the Eskimo Group of Companies under agreements dated 13th April 1964. The balance of £1,200,000 remains on loan to The Union International Co. Ltd. and J Lyons & Co Ltd and is repayable over three years bearing interest in the meantime on the balance outstanding at 6½% per annum.

13. THE BALANCE OF CONTRACTS

for Capital Expenditure entered into by Subsidiary Companies not provided for in these Accounts amounted to £1,412,079 (1965: £1,151,648).

The Times Business News now appears in THE TIMES every day

But what is The Times Business News?

The Times Business News is a complete business newspaper carried within The Times itself. It covers industry, technology, commerce and finance on a world-wide scale and in depth. It places special emphasis on industry and technology. It appeared for the first time on April 11. Perhaps you've read it? If you haven't, there are any number of reasons why you should.

LOS ANGELES/ TEXAS/CHICAGO/NY

New York alone is not America, and so the TBN has correspondents on the spot in the industrial complexes on the West Coast, in Texas, in Chicago, in Canada and in the Buffalo/Rochester/NY State areas as well in Wall Street.

TOKYO/THE RUHR/ WESTMINSTER

Tony Vice, Business Editor

And since the strategies and tactics of governments are significant to business, the TBN holds a watching brief for its readers in this area too. For that purpose it enjoys not only its own resources but also those of The Times newspaper itself.

HULL/TYNESIDE/ THE RHONDDA/ BIRMINGHAM

Nor does the TBN miss the fact that the business of Britain is not carried on exclusively in Throgmorton and Threadneedle Streets.

It has men centred all over the U.K. wherever things are happening which can affect the plans, careers and intentions of management, workers, technologists and investors in Britain.

MADISON AVENUE/ MAYFAIR/HOLBORN

The TBN also concerns itself with the industries behind industry: marketing and advertising. It carries client, agency and service company news and, once more, the news is international and treated in depth.

MACHINE OIL AS WELL AS TICKERTAPE INK

Business today is not an academic matter of closing prices on tickertape and unexpected rallies in the pound.

It is a question of which companies are building plant, where and why they are doing it and if they are likely to achieve their targets; of new processes or methods or equipment which can throw the plans of people who don't know about them completely out of kilter; of forays, reconnaissances and full scale invasions from abroad (from Europe as well as the U.S.A.) into British industry and into the British high street.

Peter Jay, Economic Correspondent

It is concerned with what is tediously and continuously called 'the brain drain' but which is really a multi-directional shift and exchange of brain and manpower within and without Britain.

So The Times Business News, complete as its financial information is, has more than tickertape ink in it, it also has machine oil, midnight oil and brickdust.

In short, The Times Business News misses nothing, and what it does not miss neither does it misinterpret.

WHO ARE YOU IF YOU READ THE TIMES BUSINESS NEWS?

You are whoever and whatever you are: a newspaper does not define its readers; it is defined by them and what they want from it.

You may be a tycoon, or an assistant executive of some kind or another; you may be an entrepreneur, an investor, an engineer, a technologist, an applied scientist or a student; you may be a supermarketeer or a shopkeeper aware of the presence of supermarkets around him. You may be an office boy.

WHERE DOES THE TIMES BUSINESS NEWS LEAVE THE TIMES NEWSPAPER ITSELF?

It leaves it precisely where it was this morning, in the forefront of the news on Fleet Street as the most changed and developing newspaper you can pick off a newstand.

The TBN simply complements a newspaper which already covers home and overseas news with substance and insight, that offers the refreshment of daily pages on the arts and entertainment, that expects women to be woman enough to read the daily women's page but man enough to read the rest of the newspaper too, that covers sport as accurately as it does politics and the law, whose correspondence columns are a debating ground and often a battlefield for the authoritative and the contentious on important subjects every day.

The Times is already the daily newspaper for every man who requires journalism to be both serious and readable.

MANUAL OF WORKS ACCOUNTING

by L. R. GRAHAM, F.C.W.A., F.C.C.S.

IN THE GEE'S
SERIES

How often in Industry do we find the Accountant attempting to produce sophisticated information without a solid accounting system on which to build? How many accounting organizations are operated on the 'two-tier' system of financial accounting and cost accounting without integration?

The integrated system outlined in this manual is a practical system, the integrated nominal ledger used in the system is the key to the whole operation. It can be read like a book, to reveal all the essential details of the factory's activity. Production of reliable, speedy, Management Accounts and statistics is almost a simple operation.

The author has found that, during his thirteen years in industry, there are many firms without a reliable Management Accounting system and also many who have little or no understanding of the real meaning of 'integration'. The author also found that while studying for professional qualifications and seeking practical experience early in his career that there appeared to be very few, if any, books available which dealt with the complete accounting system, especially in the engineering industry to which this book is primarily directed.

It is considered that this book is the first publication to lay down the complete accounting system for the engineering industry which will be invaluable to students, accountants in industry, and also accountants in practice.

This complete system has been successfully introduced in engineering factories producing a wide variety of products, both as single units, and in factories linked to a central organization. Once this basic system has been introduced then sophistication can follow.

CITY NOTES

WITH the Budget out of the way and initial stock-market reaction and adjustments made, there is currently a better volume of fact on which to base investment decisions. All the same, the annual exercise of the Budget with all the pre-Budget estimating and guess-work is every bit as much a ritual as is the January stock-market exercise when there is accent on 'shares to buy for the New Year'.

The Budget is admittedly an eliminator of uncertainty and theoretically, at least, it should put a known quantity in the stock-market equation. But the Budget itself has long since ceased to be the one major economic controlling exercise of the year. Last year, for instance, the measures of July were of far greater economic and investment consequence than the Budget of the previous spring. This year's Budget was framed against the background of a considerably improved external position and a gradually improving internal one and that broad background is the major investment consideration rather than the Budget itself.

Meanwhile the moves towards lower interest rates continue and the fixed interest end of the stock-market must be expected to stay firm. Thereby it should provide a prop to equities where hopes, plus shortage of stock in the market, may tend to push prices ahead more strongly than the facts of potential industrial earnings and dividends appear to warrant.

EVIDENCE that the Government is now working on a new five-year National Plan has received very little attention in the City. The original National Plan was torn to shreds as a result of the sterling crisis and the need for a return of all-out economic 'Stop' - if 'Stop' can be all-out. The impression is that any new plan will hardly be a plan at all in so far as it is unlikely to set 'targets' but merely suggest lines on which the economy and industry ought to be developed. To plan the economy five years ahead without prejudicing Government policy in the interim seems hardly a logical exercise. The past experience of economic plans of this nature inspires little confidence that any new plan will be any more successful than its fore-runners, unless it is so nebulous that it proves to be a plan merely in name.

INDUSTRIAL and Commercial Finance Corporation has announced the first merger to have stemmed from the establishment of its Industrial Mergers subsidiary at the beginning of this year. The merger is between two Northants footwear companies, Church & Co and Joseph Cheaney.

Since its formation, Industrial Mergers has received well over one thousand inquiries, of which some two hundred and fifty are viewed as serious applications. Potential buyers, largely in the engineering industry, outnumber sellers by four to one.

DURING 1966 the gross total of interest and dividends on securities quoted on the London Stock Exchange fell by £54 million to £2,523 million. Interest in fixed interest securities rose 10 per cent to £103 million but equity dividends fell 10.1 per cent to £157 million. In this year's edition of the annual booklet issued by the Council of the Stock Exchange it is estimated that not more than £850 million of the £2,523 million can have reached the pool of personal disposable income.

Business Efficiency Exhibition at Manchester

THE City Hall, Deansgate, Manchester, is the venue for the first of this year's major office equipment exhibitions organized by the Business Equipment Trade Association. The exhibition will be opened by Sir Stanley Raymond, Chairman of the British Railways Board, next Monday morning, April 17th, and will continue until Friday evening, April 21st; the daily hours of opening will be 10 a.m. to 6.30 p.m.

A wide selection of office machines, systems and equipment designed to promote greater efficiency in the office will be on display, and some fifty exhibitors will be taking part. Brief notes on a selection of the exhibits follow:

Wire Service for Data Transmission

MUFAX facsimile business communication systems will be demonstrated on Stand 15. Mufax enables any document – typed, handwritten or printed – to be reproduced at one or more distant points. The document remains in the originating office while an exact copy is produced wherever necessary. The delays and uncertainties of sending documents by post and the use of messengers are eliminated. Trained staff are not needed.

A complete system will be demonstrated at the exhibition, illustrating a communications centre linked to outstations. The centre and two outstations will each be equipped with a transmitter and receiver, allowing two-way communications, while a third outstation will have a receiver only. This installation will use the Mufax D-900/901 system that can operate over public telephone or radio links at any distance.

Also demonstrated on the stand will be the Mufax Courier 500 system. This has been designed for applications up to a distance of ten miles where high-speed operation is practical. The system will enable documents 11 in. x 8½ in. to be transmitted in two minutes.

Muirhead & Co Ltd, Beckenham, Kent.

Do-it-Yourself Continuous Stationery

ONE of the special application models in the Rotaprint range – the R30/CS – will be in action on Stand 12. It provides economic production of short to medium runs of continuous interfold stationery and operates with the simplicity and convenience of small offset.

To companies using computers, the R30/CS represents a fast and reliable means of producing the required quantities of computer stationery 'on-the-spot' and under direct control. In addition, the R30/CS will accept paper masters in continuous form; when more copies of output are required than can conveniently be supplied by carbon sets, these masters can be pre-printed with constant data and reproduced on a high-speed, quick-change offset duplicator such as the Rotaprint R75QC or the R40/AS.

Rotaprint Ltd, Honeypot Lane, London NW9.

Remote-Control Dictation System

NEW on the Dictaphone stand (Stand 1) is the Europa Telecord remote-control dictation equipment, which uses magnetic belts as recording media. Previous systems have been developed by adapting desk dictating machines for remote-control operation. Europa Telecord, however, has been designed with the recording machine and its associated control components housed in a single casing. Emphasis has been laid on designing a machine that is simple to operate, needs the minimum of attendance and is elegant in appearance.

A particular feature of the design is the way in which the recorders are mounted so that they can be pivoted on a horizontal axis. This enables them to be adjusted to the most convenient height for the attendant to reach the controls whether she is sitting at her desk or standing up.

Dictaphone Co Ltd, 1 Knightsbridge Green, London SW1.

Computing from Magnetic Stripes

THE new Burroughs E 1400 electronic accounting system, manufactured at the company's Scottish plant in Cumbernauld, will be on show to the public for the first time on Stand 2. The E 1400 sells from between £7,000 and £8,250.

Equipped with a computer memory, it uses ledger cards with magnetic stripes. These stripes reduce operator participation by storing balances and other account data in a form that can be read at electronic speeds by the machine. The system is also equipped with high-speed automatic form alignment facilities for 'striped' or 'non-striped' forms.

Among the other British-made Burroughs accounting machines on display will be the E 1000, F 5000, F 1000 and F 6000. All these machines can be equipped with punched paper-tape or card output facilities for use with computers.

A display area has been set aside for the demonstration of Burroughs adding and subtracting machines. Twelve-key and full keyboard models will be shown, together with calculating machines and cash registers.

Burroughs Machines Ltd, Heathrow House, Bath Road, Cranford, Middlesex.

Invoicing Equipment

A SMALL invoicing computer – the Sadie – can be seen on Stand 10. The only set of controls used by the operator is that of a standard typewriter keyboard.

Basically, its method of application is one of automating all calculations and eliminating the need to copy-type those calculations on the required documents.

The operator puts an invoice/order/dispatch set of forms in the carriage of the typewriter unit, types in the descriptive matter – or feeds it in on punched tape or edge-punched cards if a separate console is attached – together with the price and discount rates, and the machine calculates, extends in fractions of a second and positions the forms ready for the next item. Sub-totals, grand totals, purchase tax and similar calculations are all performed automatically in milli-seconds. Print-out by the machine is at a rate of nearly one thousand characters a minute.

Sadie can be programmed to suit any price structure with the appropriate code symbol printed out for check purposes. The change from sterling to decimal calculations can be made at the flick of a switch, and this will be demonstrated at the exhibition.

Also on show is the Sadiewriter – a data preparation unit for edge-punched cards and punched paper-tape. The output can subsequently be processed by a large computer or by Sadie itself.

Business Mechanisation Ltd, 180 Tottenham Court Road, London W1.

Desk-top Calculators

ON Stand No. 23 will be exhibited the complete Anita and Comptometer range of electronic and electro-mechanical desk calculators. The Anita range will feature the new ten-key Anita Mk 12, as well as the popular Mk 10 model. The Anita Mk 10 is designed to work in sterling or in whole numbers and decimals and is, therefore, ideal for use in the present currency and the proposed decimal currency.

The full Comptometer range includes storage models and electrically operated single register machines.

Plus-adding machines will also be on display and these are available to include special keyboard arrangements for work in hours and minutes, weights, whole numbers and decimals, or sterling.

Sumlock-Comptometer Ltd, 39 St James's Street, London SW1.

From Shop Floor to Computer

COLLECTADATA 30 is a system, by Friden Ltd, which is designed for integrating production control and will be demonstrated on Stand 34.

Aimed at the collection of basic information from the shop floor, Collectada overcomes the traditional bottleneck in computer-orientated production systems – delays in translating shop floor data into machine language. Collectadata solves this problem by using special transmitters sited on the shop floor itself.

With these, all personnel can report various events such as 'job start', 'job end' and 'job suspend' simply by inserting in the transmitter a job card in the form of a pre-punched 80 column I.C.T. card, together with a special Friden plastic badge which identifies the work centre and transmitting personnel. Variable items like 'operation number' and 'quantity in batch' can be reported at the same time by means of dials on the transmitters. The system has already been ordered in the Manchester area by such companies as Foden Ltd, and Fairey Engineering Ltd.

Friden Ltd, 101 Blackfriars Road, London SE1.

Calculating and Invoicing

ON show for the first time at the exhibition (Stand 38) is the latest, electronic version of the Adler Factura invoicing machine, the model 400.

A number of features in the Adler Factura 400 minimize the time differential between electronic calculation and print-out. The typewriter unit is electronically controlled and prints out figures and symbols at twenty characters a second. As the totals are printed in various columns, under-scoring is done simultaneously.

To allow print-out of as much information as possible on invoices, the Factura 400 provides for 140 characters per writing line on the 13 in. carriage model; 200 characters on the 18 in. model; and 270 characters on the 24 in. model.

A feature of interest to those invoicing for export and hoping to obviate further problems raised by decimalization of the £ is that the Factura 400 converts from sterling to decimal working at the flick of a switch. It can also calculate in weights and measures. Controlled by an electronic programme, the machine requires no mechanical programme bars; changeover from one routine to another being effected by a switch.

To allow its use for all kinds of accounting functions as well as for invoicing, the Adler Factura 400 has an automatic front feed unit which may be fitted to 18 in. and 24 in. carriage models. This unit automatically aligns ledger cards and other documents. Using the unit, an operator can carry out ledger posting as she prepares invoices.

Office & Electronic Machines Ltd, 140 Borough High Street, London SE1.

THE INSTITUTE OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

Summer Course at Oxford

In the reference to the Oxford Summer Course in last week's issue, under 'Courses and Conferences during 1967', it was stated that informal talks were to be given by Mr R. M. Trueblood, C.P.A., Immediate Past-President of The American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, and by Mr J. R. M. Wilson, C.A. (CANADA), President of The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. We now understand that Mr Trueblood will speak on 'Fraud, malpractice and liability', and Mr Wilson on 'Auditing in the future'.

The views of two such eminent speakers on these important and thought-provoking topics will undoubtedly be received with great interest by the Summer Course members.

NOTTINGHAM SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS*Course in Auditing

The first of a series of courses on auditing to be arranged by the Nottingham Society of Chartered Accountants is to be held in The Welbeck Hotel, Milton Street, Nottingham, on Saturday, May 6th, commencing at 10 a.m.

There will be two lectures: 'Special problems in the audit of the smaller business', and 'Audit working papers', both of which will be given by Mr W. O. Ling, A.C.A., a partner in the firm of Oswald Ling & Son, Chartered Accountants, of Derby. Both lectures will be followed by group discussions on case studies.

The fee for the course (including lunch and other refreshments) is £1 5s payable in advance with applications, which should be sent to Mr P. A. Storrey, F.C.A., Marlborough House, Cranmer Street, Nottingham, not later than April 21st.

NORTHERN SOCIETY OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS

The annual general meeting of the Northern Society of Chartered Accountants will be held at the County Hotel, Neville Street, Newcastle upon Tyne 1, on Tuesday, May 23rd, at 12 noon.

LONDON CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT STUDENTS' WEEK-END COURSE AT CAMBRIDGE

Nearly two hundred students attended the recent Cambridge week-end course of The Chartered Accountant Students' Society of London held in Corpus Christi and Pembroke Colleges. Mr G. B. C. Hughes, M.A., F.C.A., was Chairman of the course.

The President of the Society, Mr Ernest F. G. Whinney, M.A., F.C.A., presided at the guest night dinner in Corpus on the Thursday, when Chancellor the Rev. E. Garth Moore, M.A., Fellow of the College, spoke of its history, and Mr Whinney also presided at the guest night dinner in Pembroke the following night, when Mr B. E. King, M.A., LL.B., a Fellow of the College, told members about its origin and development.

Coulson, F.C.A., and Mr F. Clive de Paula, T.D., F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.Dip.M.A., M.I.M.C., discussed the many opportunities for the young qualified man, outlining the advantages and disadvantages of being in practice and of being in industry.

As the accountant seeks a true and fair view of the facts, so the musician attempts to interpret the feelings and moods of composers. Mr Antony Hopkins, a broadcaster, composer and pianist, spoke on this, entralling his audience.

On Sunday, after a service in Corpus Christi College chapel conducted and addressed by Chancellor the Rev. Garth Moore, members of the course heard Mr R. W. M. Dias, M.A., LL.B., Fellow of Magdalene College and university lecturer in law, discuss the question 'Is the law such an ass?'

Objectives achieved

For the group discussions this year, the Committee had arranged more groups with fewer members in each, and this was found to be helpful. Once again, members of the course had valuable practice in marshalling their thoughts during discussion.

Tradition calls for a 'punt race' on the Saturday afternoon; this is invariably an hilarious occasion enjoyed by the watching crowds as much as by those taking part, some of whom found themselves in the river. A dance in Corpus hall that evening proved as animated as in previous years.

National economic policy

Mr David Lea, M.A., of the Research and Economic Department of the Trades Union Congress, spoke on the national economic policy, the object of which, he said, was to reconcile the competing demands on Britain's production and at the same time sustaining economic growth. Mr Lea also discussed public and private spending; investment and consumption; prices and incomes, and the role of economic planning.

Management consultancy

One of the rapidly developing fields is that of management consultancy, said Mr D. E. Morgan, Chairman of David Morgan (Financial Analysts) Ltd, in a subsequent address. He held that the young accountant, whether in practice or industry, must be educated in the technique of 'management' and endeavour to keep abreast of it.

At other sessions, Mr H. O. H.

DEPENDING ON ACCOUNTANTS*Comments at Nottingham Certified Accountants' Dinner

There should be more executives in industry and commerce studying accountancy, declared the President of the Notts, Derby and Lincoln Society of Certified Accountants, Mr Donald J. J. Viner, F.A.C.C.A., speaking at the Society's annual dinner at Nottingham University recently.

Nottingham's prosperity, Mr Viner said, depended on its industry and commerce, and in turn the latter depended to a great extent on advice given by its accountants on costing and other financial matters.

Exporting was of the utmost importance to the country and it was only healthy businesses which could afford to export, he added. This was a field in which the profession could be of great help, and they would continue to preserve and advance the city's fortunes.

Other speakers at the dinner were the Lord Mayor of Nottingham, Ald. Percy Holland, and Mr J. C. Manton, President-elect of the Nottingham branch of the Institute of Bankers.

At the same venue, on May 24th at 5.45 p.m. for 6 p.m., Mr E. J. Murfin, A.C.A., will lead a discussion on 'Management accounting' at a meeting of the Society's Discussion Group.

INSTITUTE OF INTERNAL AUDITORS
London Chapter

Mr A. G. Norman, C.B.E., D.F.C., Deputy President of the C.B.I., addressed the Institute of Internal Auditors, London Chapter, on Wednesday on the subject of 'Audit inquiries into failure to achieve forecasts.'

An inquiry, he said, should be a review of management calibre, objectively highlighting reasons for successes as well as of failures, and extending beyond financial terms into technical progress, market trends and competitor activity.

Management could not afford to have areas of failure withheld from them; but no positive benefit would result from an inquiry without a proper basis of accountability having been established throughout the organization.

MANUAL OF WORKS ACCOUNTING

by L. R. GRAHAM, F.C.W.A., F.C.C.S.

IN THE GEE'S
SERIES

How often in industry do we find the Accountant attempting to produce sophisticated information without a solid accounting system on which to build? How many accounting organizations are operated on the 'two-tier' system of financial accounting and cost accounting without integration?

The integrated system outlined in this manual is a practical system, the integrated nominal ledger used in the system is the key to the whole operation, it can be read like a book, to reveal all the essential details of the factory's activity. Production of reliable, speedy, Management Accounts and statistics is almost a simple operation.

The author has found that, during his thirteen years in industry, there are many firms without a reliable Management Accounting system and also many who have little or no understanding of the real meaning of 'integration'. The author also found that while studying for professional qualifications and seeking practical experience early in his career that there appeared to be very few, if any, books available which dealt with the complete accounting system, especially in the engineering industry to which this book is primarily directed.

It is considered that this book is the first publication to lay down the complete accounting system for the engineering industry which will be invaluable to students, accountants in industry, and also accountants in practice.

This complete system has been successfully introduced in engineering factories producing a wide variety of products, both as single units, and in factories linked to a central organization. Once this basic system has been introduced then sophistication can follow.

STATISTICS FOR ACCOUNTANTS

WHY SHOULD AN ACCOUNTANT NEED STATISTICS?

The easy answer to this is that he will need to pass his examinations. All the major accountancy bodies now include statistics in their examination syllabuses. The student, be he working for the examination of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants or The Institute of Company Accountants will need a certain degree of statistical knowledge.

The more difficult answer is that he will need it in his work as an accountant. The fact that these professional bodies include it in their syllabuses indicates that they believe so and this is emphasized by the syllabus for the newly introduced JOINT DIPLOMA IN MANAGEMENT ACCOUNTING SERVICES where the study of statistics is required to an even more advanced level. From being merely a recording function accountancy has become a live information function. A major part of all information used and required by senior management is, and must be, supplied by the accountant.

Society's Continued Progress

In his statement to shareholders, the Chairman, Viscount Harcourt, expresses thanks for his services to Mr A. H. Ensor who is not seeking re-election to the board having attained the age of 75 and refers to the appointment of Mr R. E. B. Lloyd as a member of the Society's board.

Lord Harcourt says that the increase in new business has been eminently satisfactory having regard to the difficult conditions during 1966 and thanks broker friends and agents for their continuing support. Total new life sums assured net of reassurances amounted to £510,294,000 in 1966 compared with £495,628,000 in 1965. There was a slower rate of increase in premium income from pensions business due to the standstill in wages and salaries.

There was a slight decline in the gross rate of interest earned on the life assurance and annuity fund from £6 10s 3d per cent in 1965 to £6 9s per cent in 1966 owing to a number of special factors but the basic trend of the investment yield is one of increase. Mortality experience remains satisfactory to the Society. A firm of business consultants has been commissioned to suggest additional means of controlling expenses.

Dealing with non-life business the Chairman says that fire business produced a record profit of £583,810 but that the accident account produced a small loss due to motor business overseas. Marine business showed a profit for 1963 of £21,371 but because the outlook for 1964 and 1965 is not favourable a transfer of £150,000 has been made from profit and loss account to strengthen the marine fund.

The total assets of the Society at December 31st, 1966, amounted to £804,539,000 having increased during the year by £64,310,000.

Lord Harcourt says that with the Society's Actuary the Board has examined the matter of introducing an annual distribution of surplus and points out that this would not of itself increase the inherent profitability of the Society's operations and would necessitate the provision of reserves to cover fluctuations in experience between valuations. The next valuation will be made at the end of 1968 after which it may be right and proper to introduce annual distributions.

He also says that a detailed study has been made on the question of mutualisation but that since this would entail a substantial transfer from policyholders' to shareholders' funds to support a loan stock that would require to be issued to shareholders in compensation, the directors feel that, in present circumstances mutualisation is neither feasible nor justifiable.

On the question of the segregation of long and short-term business (including segregation of assets), Lord Harcourt says that segregation is unlikely on balance to be of advantage to shareholders but that the directors will keep the matter under periodic review bearing in mind the possibility of legislation being introduced at some time which may make segregation compulsory.

Lord Harcourt refers to the fact that under the Finance Act 1965, no part of the franked income of the Society's large annuity funds was available to offset the liability under Schedule F for tax on the dividend. The Finance Act 1966 however, gives a small improvement in this respect and a proportion of the franked income of the annuity fund will now be available for this purpose. Credit has been taken in the profit and loss account of the sum available for the period April 6th, 1966, to December 31st, 1966, amounting to £350,000. The amount available in a full year will be greater. Credit has also been taken in the profit and loss account for the transitional relief available under section 85 of the Finance Act 1965, estimated at £250,000. He points out that the overall tax liability in the life assurance and annuity funds was substantially unchanged by the Finance Act 1965, except for the additional burden of capital gains tax on investments relating to life assurance business. Arising out of the replacement of the income tax year of assessment by the corporation tax accounting period a serious additional tax charge in respect of management expenses has been incurred, the amount involved being £600,000.

To the balance of £5,101,490 brought forward in the profit and loss account from December 31st, 1965, there has been added £1,098,001 in interest and dividends as well as the net underwriting profits of £415,814 from the fire, accident and marine accounts.

The directors recommend the payment of a final dividend for 1966 of 6d per 1s share, making a total for 1966 of 1s per 1s share.

The Chairman concludes by expressing thanks to the General Manager, Mr P. Cahill, and his colleagues on the staff for their resolution and efforts in difficult times.

Report Par Excellence

IF awards were made to professional bodies for the most informative and attractively presented annual report and accounts, those of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales for 1966, issued to members this week, would be hard to excel. The changes from the familiar format for many years past are bold and imaginative. Among the innovations is a crisp and authoritative prefatory statement by the PRESIDENT, and the report no longer consists of the apparently endless succession of numbered paragraphs which used to have a somewhat soporific effect on the reader. Instead, he is now led on from item to item by eye-catching cross headlines in distinctive type and statistical information is neatly illustrated by graphs and diagrams. (It is unfortunate that in our reprint of extracts from the report and accounts on other pages in this issue we cannot reflect the excellence of the original presentation.)

Revenue account transactions have been allocated to the main functions and activities of the Institute so that both the analysed expenditure and the income relating thereto may readily be compared. Only two important features appear to have resisted change – the Institute's balance sheet and the auditors' report thereon. It is true that the balance sheet this year sports five notes as compared with one last year, but otherwise the layout is virtually unaltered. The auditors' report, apart from dates, is also as before but – a point worthy of remark – was signed two weeks earlier than last year's.

The new form of accounting shows that the gross revenue of the Institute for 1966 from all sources amounted to nearly £1 million. More than half of this vast sum was derived from members' annual subscriptions and admission fees. The final surplus for the year was £77,710 as against £87,605 in 1965 and a short preamble to the accounts shows that the significant differences between the two years were four in number – the revised subscription and admission fee rates brought in another £122,652 in 1966; the net cost of technical activities, mitigated in 1965 by the sale of tax booklet 'best-sellers', increased by £57,895; the national advertising campaign, launched in 1966, cost £31,916; and also in that year a once and for all commitment commission of £10,000, relating to the special borrowing arrangements, was paid.

The accumulated fund at December 31st, 1966, after transferring the year's surplus thereto, was £500,819. The membership at that date was 42,457 and £'s divided by people gives approximately £11 per head. Calculations based on the corresponding statistics at the end of 1956 and 1946 each produce an answer around £10. The consistency of these figures shows that the Institute has been justified in raising its subscription rates over the years in order to increase the range and scope of its activities. The real result of this progressive policy is that the hypothetical monetary stake which each member has in the Institute, although apparently unchanged, is now worth very much more in terms of services than it was twenty years ago. He has only to compare the Council's reports for 1946 and 1966 to appreciate the present true worth of his membership to him – if he cares to make full use of the facilities available.

As has been stressed so often in these pages, the future strength of the Institute rests very much on the numbers and quality of the articled clerks currently being recruited. It is therefore satisfactory to note that not only was the number of the articles of clerkship registered in 1966 more than that for 1965 but, also, that the educational standards of the entrants were higher. University graduates accounted for 367 of the total of 3,652 (in 1965 it was 324 out of 3,623) and the number of 'new boys' boasting at least two 'A' levels was substantially greater. About 2,000 new members qualify each year which means that another 1,500 or so fall by the wayside. The PRESIDENT points out that a 5 per cent increase in membership is not enough to satisfy the growing demands in practice, in industry and in the public service. This clearly underlines the need to recruit only the most promising of the material offered if the present four-successes-out-of-seven ratio is to be bettered.

The need for further education after qualifying has long been recognized by the Council and in 1966 1,745 members attended Institute courses covering tax practice, management information, computer techniques and general professional subjects. The gross fees received from those taking part totalled £101,729. It is the Council's policy to make such courses self-supporting but in 1966 it went one better by making a useful profit of £1,950. Also to be commended are the Council's practical efforts to encourage members to take up accountancy teaching in universities and colleges as a career. Opportunities in this field have greatly expanded since the inauguration by the Institute last year of full-time courses for articled clerks. Four centres participated in the pilot scheme in 1966 and the Council has now decided to increase their number to twelve this year. It would indeed be a pity

Every speech and pronouncement made by the presidents of the accountancy bodies in the United Kingdom in recent months has been studied by members for any reference therein to the progress of the negotiations for closer collaboration in the profession. In his accompanying statement Sir HENRY BENSON discloses that a surprising degree of unanimity had been found to exist among the participants in the discussions held so far and that by the end of last year 'a scheme had been rough hewn'. Unfortunately, the Government's move to bring all professions under the scrutiny of the Monopolies Commission means that any legislation required to implement the 'get-together' scheme will have to be delayed for at least two years. The additional burden which the Government's proposed investigations will impose on the profession, already coping with the interpretation and administration of 'a mass of turgid legislation', Sir HENRY aptly describes as unnecessary and ill-timed. The letters exchanged between the PRESIDENT and the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER in May and June of last year on the subject of the unnecessary complexity of recent fiscal measures are reproduced in the report, as also are the texts of other correspondence with and memoranda to various Government officials and departments; they are not included in our reprint, however, as we dealt with them in extenso at the time.

As the Council's 1966 report is placed on the shelf with its many predecessors, three main impressions remain. The first, which leaps to the eye almost before reading it, is the technical excellence of the presentation of so much information. The second is the variety of activities in which the Institute interests itself, highlighted by the new schedule to the revenue account. And the third is the amount of voluntary effort that must be given to the affairs of the Institute by the 1,200 members who serve on the Council and on its numerous standing and other committees and who run the district societies. The PRESIDENT estimates that if each of them gives no more than £200 of his time at professional scale rates, their contribution in monetary terms would amount to about a quarter of a million pounds per annum. We hesitate to accuse such an expert as Sir HENRY of unrealistic costing, but our estimate would be much higher. What matters, of course, is that the results worthily match this impressive collective effort.

The Budget and Taxation

WHEN the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER told the Committee of Ways and Means last week that his Budget did not contain any major tax changes he perhaps forgot that he was about to move the imposition of the 10 per cent surcharge on the surtax imposed for 1965-66.

The same motion included a provision deferring the payment of the additional surtax liability to the beginning of September 1967. Another motion imposed surtax for 1966-67 at the rates originally laid down for 1965-66, i.e. without the 10 per cent addition. A third motion imposed corporation tax at 40 per cent for the financial year 1966, i.e. the year ended March 31st, 1967.

It seems odd that so-called 'reforms' should result in a situation where industry and trade have to be carried on over a whole tax year without anyone knowing what rate of corporation tax is going to be imposed for that year. A similar situation obtains in the case of surtax. We have not been told what the surtax rates for 1967-68 are to be and we shall probably not know until twelve months hence. When a man is expending effort on the earning of an income, he is surely entitled to know how much of that income he is going to be allowed to keep for himself.

Included in the Financial Statement was the following laconic sentence under the heading 'Corporation Tax':

'It is proposed to allow to a member of a group of companies relief for trading losses, management expenses or charges on income of another member of the group.'

The CHANCELLOR filled this out by saying that if any member of a group of companies had a loss in trade in an accounting period ending after the passing of the Finance Bill (presumably after July next), another member of the same group could claim relief for that loss against its own profits. Now this was something which industry called for almost as soon as the Finance Bill 1965 was published. The subvention provisions invented by the Millard Tucker Committee, as passed into law, are hedged about with restrictions which the Inland Revenue have exacerbated by their own restrictive interpretation. The CHANCELLOR complained about the 'misplaced ingenuity' spent on reducing the tax burden. Perhaps he has also taken account of the tremendous amount of wasted time devoted to complicated arrangements made necessary to bring a company into the letter of the subvention provisions, as well as the spirit. Groups for this purpose will be defined on the usual three-quarters beneficial owning basis as adopted for the old profits tax.

One of the 'reforms' introduced by the Finance Act 1965 was the nightmare of trying to find out whether one's company was a close company or not. The CHANCELLOR has now generously acknowledged that the definition 'needs clarification'. Proposed amendments would help to remove the danger that portfolio investment by the institutions would turn some public [sic] companies into close companies.

Although income tax and surtax are with us from the cradle to the grave, they still retain the aura of taxes annually imposed on an apparently temporary basis. Although this has been modified in such matters as the carry-forward of trading losses, there is still no provision for the carry-forward of unused personal allowances; nor is there any general provision for the spreading of income for the purposes of surtax, notwithstanding the very highly progressive nature of that tax. However, the anomalies arising sometimes become so glaring in a particular sector that the Government is shamed into doing something about it. This year it is the turn of the author 'or other creative artist'. Such a person owning a work which has been before the public for ten years or more and then selling it for a lump sum, will be allowed to spread that lump sum forward for six years instead of treating it as income of the year of sale. This concession makes one wonder whether there is some kind of love-hate relationship between the Treasury and authors, for the provisions introduced in the Finance Act 1960 for taxing receipts after a profession had ceased, were imposed largely with tax-avoiding authors in mind.

With the wind of change sweeping through the corridors of Somerset House one heard confident forecasts that stamp duties (first imposed in the seventeenth century) were on the way out as being antiquated and costly to collect. On the contrary the Budget promises them a new lease of life. It is true that 'conveyance on sale' reliefs for small transactions have been extended to higher sums but this barely keeps pace with the fall in the value of money. Incidentally, these reliefs are by no means confined to house purchase; they cover such things as voluntary disposition of equitable interests by people who could well afford the stamp duty.

Hidden away in the Finance Act 1899 is a section imposing a stamp duty of 2s 6d per cent on the issue of loan capital. The corresponding duty on share capital is four times as much. With his Finance Act 1965 the CHANCELLOR made share capital somewhat unpopular, for distributions in right of it are very harshly treated for corporation tax and income tax purposes. Consequently there has been a retreat from share capital to loan capital and the loss in stamp duty has been a mere by-product of this retreat. Instead of abolishing both stamp duties, however, the CHANCELLOR has decided to quadruple the loan capital duty, and at the same time he has threatened to cut down the wide range of exemptions from that duty. On the other hand, there are to be further stamp duty reliefs for issues by local authorities.

The stamp duty on 'bearer instruments' is a high one. London, as a money and investment centre, normally attracts a great many bearer instruments from outside the sterling area to the great benefit of the economy. In order not to kill this goose, the CHANCELLOR has promised to reduce the stamp duty on bearer instruments in foreign currencies outside the sterling area.

The capital gains tax provisions, combined with life insurance relief, have made life insurance more attractive than ever. A policy-holder entitled to bonuses is naturally affected by the fortunes of the company in relation to ordinary income taxation as well as to the capital gains which the company can earn. When the company receives franked investment income the allocation between the shareholders and the policy-holders is a matter of considerable importance. There has been some disagreement between the companies and the Revenue on this matter and legislation is now to lay down the rules for the allocation. Its precise wording in the Finance Bill will be awaited with interest.

Current Affairs

Fraud Investigation to be Intensified

THE Minister of State, Board of Trade, told the House of Commons last week that he accepted that there was a need for improvement in both the organization and the methods officially adopted in the investigation of fraud. The Government had been studying how best to improve the system and would shortly be making proposals which would involve some legislation. The Minister rejected a suggestion by Mr Edward Lyons, M.P., that there should be a specialized unified body, with headquarters in London and regional offices, which should take over fraud from the Director of Public Prosecutions and investigations from the Board of Trade, at the same time absorbing the fraud squads of the City Police, the Metropolitan Police and other Police Forces. Mr Lyons wanted to see chartered accountants and solicitors with prosecuting experience on the staff of this new body (he said a fraud for over £1 million had to be perpetrated for the case to be allotted a serjeant). The Minister said these people were very hard to get.

In the Commons on Monday, the President of the Board of Trade said that after consultation with the Home Secretary and the Attorney-General it had been decided to co-ordinate more closely the machinery of all departments responsible for handling fraud cases. Mr Jay is to propose amendments to the Companies Bill at the committee stage to give the Board of Trade much more effective power of investigation into suspected company fraud generally. The Board would then be able to require the suspected company to produce its books for inspection and to require persons to give explanations of the company's books and papers.

Post-costing

AS was only to be expected, the impact of the Ferranti Affair remains ever-present. The recent case concerning Bristol Siddeley has again brought to a head the problem of determining how major Government contracts should be priced. Discussions are continuing between industrial representatives and the Government over the recommendations of the Lang Report of February 1965, and there is no doubt that the latest case will imbue the participants with a new sense of urgency.

The Lang Report raised three specific points for determination. The first was the method to be used for calculating overheads; the second, the formulae to be used in calculating profit, and the third – and this is, of course, the most controversial – the extent to which the Government should have access in the case of fixed price contracts to full information about the contractor's costs after the time when the price is fixed. The Lang Committee, while recognizing the value of post-costing, i.e. investigating after the price has been agreed, felt that it should not be introduced as an invariable practice on the grounds that it would weaken incentive to improve efficiency.

The Government, however, is insisting that post-costing is an integral part of the process, and the Confederation of British Industry is engaged on behalf of industry in discussions to resolve this dispute on all these three points. It has just issued an interim statement on Government procurement contracts in which the issues are set out but no policy decisions are announced.

In the course of these discussions, the C.B.I. will have the assistance of Sir Henry Benson, C.B.E., F.C.A., in the negotiations over the determination of suitable profit formulae.

Redundancy Award Reversed

AN award of £548 by the Industrial Tribunal under the Redundancy Payments Act 1965 was quashed last week on the ground that there was no evidence before the Tribunal to support the award; the evidence going the other way (Wolverhampton Die Casting Ltd v. Kitson).

The company, which employed Mr Kitson as a toolroom lathe operator, decided on a reorganization under which an associate company would take on the manufacture of the dies and tools. Mr Kitson was offered similar employment with the associate company on slightly more favourable conditions. This he refused on the ground that his cerebral thrombotic condition would be aggravated. The point at issue was whether this was reasonable. He argued that the associate company's toolroom was a 'contract toolroom' which he said meant that he would be under pressure to finish a particular job in a particular time and this, he alleged, would be detrimental to his health. The company gave evidence that it was a contract toolroom only in the sense that work was measured for the calculation of hours saved. There was also evidence that Mr Kitson had been assured that he would be given the same consideration in respect of his health condition as previously. Notwithstanding this evidence the Tribunal awarded him £548. The company appealed on the ground that the Tribunal had no evidence to support such award, with the result we have indicated.

Leasehold Reform for Bigger Houses

WHEN the House of Commons Standing Committee B had its second sitting on the Leasehold Reform Bill on April 11th, Mr S. C. Silkin, Q.C., moved an amendment deleting from clause 1 the restriction of compulsory enfranchisement to houses having rateable values not exceeding £200 (£400 in London). He produced a powerful argument against the Government's limitation of the benefits of the Bill to those lessees who happened to have houses of a rateable value within those purely arbitrary limits. According to widespread reports in the national Press, the Minister disposed of this amendment by simply undertaking that the Government would introduce its own amendment at the report stage.

What, in fact, happened was that after the Minister had made this offer and when Mr Silkin was about to withdraw his own amendment, Mr Graham Page insisted on a division. Thereupon the three ministerial representatives decided to vote with Mr Silkin in favour of Mr Silkin's amendment. They were joined by everyone, Government and Opposition alike, with the exception of Mr Graham Page, who alone voted against the amendment and Mr David Mitchell who did not vote. It follows that as the Bill now stands there is no limitation in clause 1 by any reference to rateable value: the lessee of a mansion is on equal terms with the lessee of a terraced house. Moreover, the Government are now in a difficult tactical position for reintroducing any limitation by reference to rateable value.

The Irish Budget

ON April 11th the Minister for Finance, Mr C. J. Haughey, F.C.A., announced his first Budget. While it was in the main a stay-as-you-are Budget, with no change in the overall rate of taxation and with the usual additional load on the 'old reliables' - 2d on twenty cigarettes, a corresponding increase in duty on pipe tobacco and 1d on the pint - new ground was nevertheless broken in two important respects.

As might have been anticipated from the first chartered accountant to hold the ministerial office, Mr Haughey showed a sharp perception of the need to strengthen industrial incentive. As a specific encouragement to higher investment in manufacturing industry and to improve Ireland's competitive position, he stated that he proposed to raise to 50 per cent (from 40 per cent) the initial allowance for capital expenditure incurred in the period up to March 31st, 1968, on new machinery and plant. The increased allowance will also be made available for expenditure in the three subsequent years to March 31st, 1971.

His most startling innovation, however, showed a breakthrough in thinking which may well herald far-reaching developments in future industrial accounting. He announced for the first time what he described as 'free depreciation'. This is to be a special system of tax allowances applicable to new machinery and plant used in industry - excluding mobile equipment such as road vehicles - designed to allow an industrialist to claim, in addition to the normal depreciation, such further depreciation as he might choose. Thus he could, should he so wish, write off 100 per cent of his expenditure in the first year. The allowance will be introduced only in the twelve underdeveloped western counties, where the necessity to provide an incentive to business investment is paramount. While Mr Haughey did not refer to any possible future extension of the concession, the thought will not be far from the minds of industrialists in the remaining counties.

Following some minor improvements in the shape of improvements in allowances for dependent relatives (£120 to be raised to £140) and for children not over 11 (£120 to be raised to £135), the biggest innovation lay in the Minister's decision to accept medical expenses as allowable. The recent Commission on Income Taxation had recommended that a taxpayer incurring expense on himself or on a dependant should be allowed his vouched expenses. Their suggestion was implemented to the extent of expenses in excess of £50 per annum per person up to a maximum of £300.

Again in line with a recommendation of the Commission on Income Taxation, the Special Commissioners will in future be relieved of all administrative duties and will become a purely appellate body. Their title is to be changed to Appeal Commissioners.

Capital Allowances Bill Stillborn

IN our issue of February 11th, we reviewed the Bill which was introduced into the House of Lords for the purposes of consolidating the provisions about capital allowances. However, the Bill has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. A joint committee of the two Houses decided last month that the Bill was not a pure consolidation Bill and should not be proceeded with as such.

Breach of Duty in Auditing Accounts

THE auditors of a Lancashire cotton manufacturing company, whose managing director falsified the accounts, were held responsible by Mr Justice Pennycuik in the High Court on Thursday of last week for a breach of duty in auditing the accounts.

The judge directed an inquiry to ascertain the amount of compensation recoverable by the liquidator of the company which is in creditors' voluntary winding-up.

The proceedings were brought by the liquidator of Thomas Gerrard & Son Ltd, cotton and rayon manufacturers, of Adlington, near Chorley, against partners at the material time, of the firm of P. & J. Kevan, Chartered Accountants, of Arndale Chambers, Exchange Street, Bolton.

The liquidator alleged that over a period of years the company paid dividends out of capital and tax on non-existent profits.

The respondents were: Mr Kevan William Horton, of Oxford Road, Birkdale; Mr Frank Kirkham, of Hillside Avenue, Bromley Cross, near Bolton; Mr James Edward Sharman, of Albert Road West, Bolton; Mr John Phethean Nightingale, of West Dene Junction Road, Deane, Lancs; and Mr Alwyn Charles Robert Thompson, of Regent Road, Lostock, Bolton.

The judge said that Thomas Gerrard & Son, which was founded in 1881, specialized in the manufacture of brocades. Its balance sheets from March 1957 to March 1962 showed a position of stable and continuing prosperity and each year a 10 per cent dividend was paid. Kevans, who audited the accounts, gave unqualified reports stating that the books and accounts showed a true and fair view of the company's affairs.

Up to the end of September 1962, said the judge, the skies remained unclouded. Then came immediate and total disaster. It turned out that the company's accounts as presented year by year bore no relation to the true position. The company was, in fact, hopelessly insolvent.

Investigations by Kevans and an independent firm of accountants showed that Mr Sidney Croston, the managing director, had, at least from 1956-57, been falsifying the company's accounts. He had thereby concealed the fact that in 1956-57 the company made only a small profit and that in each subsequent year it had made heavy losses.

Mr Croston, who had been a well-known and respected figure in Adlington, was prosecuted and sentenced to five years. Subsequently the liquidator brought misfeasance proceedings against him. These were compromised.

Mr Croston used three methods of falsifying the books. He caused the half-yearly stock valuation to be inflated by the inclusion of non-existent items and tampered with the purchase and sales records.

The true balance sheet position of the company in November 1962 showed an adverse balance of £272,395 on the profit and loss account as against a favourable balance of £152,105 on the general reserve and profit and loss accounts in the balance sheet, based on falsified figures, in March 1962. On November 22nd, 1962, a resolution was passed for a creditors' voluntary winding-up of the company.

The company had paid income tax and profits tax on the inflated profits shown in the accounts. The whole of the tax, except £3,483, had since been recovered.

The judge said the audits were conducted by Mr Nightingale with the assistance of a senior clerk who did most of the detailed work. They were satisfied with the explanations and assurances given by Mr Croston and the company's secretary on matters which arose during the audits.

An auditor must exercise reasonable care and skill, said the judge. If he did not do so and gave an unqualified report, he was in breach of his statutory duty as an officer of the company.

The judge said he found it impossible to acquit Mr Nightingale of negligence as regards the purchases of stock before the end of each current period of account. He was entitled to rely on assurances given to him, but when altered invoices were discovered he should have been put upon inquiry. He should not then have rested content, however implicitly he may have trusted Mr Croston. It was not a case of some isolated failure of detection; the fraud was repeated half-yearly on a large scale for many years.

It had been said that the directors of the company did not give Kevans sufficient time in which to make an audit and that the firm did its best in the time at its disposal. He did not think that view could be supported on the facts.

The measure of compensation would be the loss to the company caused by Kevans breach of duty. This would include dividends distributed other than out of available profits and the tax paid on non-existent profits, most of which, fortunately, had been recovered.

The judge, directing an inquiry, said it would cover the allocation of compensation as between the individual respondents.

Mr Raymond Walton, Q.C., for the liquidator, said that it was hoped an inquiry would not be necessary and that the parties would reach agreement.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

A FRIEND of mine who is chief accountant at a worsted spinning mill telephoned me recently for a few confidential words. 'I've got an application from somebody on your staff', he said guardedly, 'for that job of cost accountant that we advertised. Would you mind my asking a confidential question or so?'

I assured him benevolently that he could ask all he chose but I would use my discretion as to what to answer. None of my staff had sought my help in the matter, so I had no axe to grind. Whereupon he identified the applicant as the one commonly known as Tishy in the department. How was Tishy reliability-wise, efficiency-wise, experience-wise, and so on?

This continual wise-wise jargon gives me a pain but I gave him careful, accurate answers, with an extra bonus - likeability-wise - because I think very highly of Tishy. When my questioner rang off I brooded awhile over ships that pass in the night and the impermanence of human contacts, and then forgot about it.

Not for long, however, because Tishy himself came in with some comparative cost figures on the renting of some more up-to-date punched-card equipment - because 'that sort of hardware gets obsolete so fast these days'. 'We might save some manpower with that card-to-tape gadget for the service bureau', I said blandly. 'Anybody in your section looking for a job these days? Natural attrition and all that'.

Tishy looked up sharply. His eyes flickered with the sequence of his thoughts . . . odd question for the boss to ask? . . . wonder if he's heard about my application? . . . hope he's not gunning for me? However, a blunt readiness to grasp nettles has always been one of Tishy's assets so he didn't hesitate.

'Nobody that I know of', he answered 'though I personally have applied for that cost job in Smith's. Have you heard about it? You know their top brass, don't you?'

Modern management principles insist that you never give direct answers to your juniors' queries but shelve them deftly, as a sort of one-up-manship gimmick. So I said inscrutably that I was sorry to hear he wasn't satisfied with his prospects with us, and drummed somewhat with my fingers to hint at suppressed annoyance.

The hint just bounced off Tishy's thick hide. He actually sat back in leisurely style and explained that he and his chaps in costs regularly applied for outside jobs. Just a matter of gaining valuable experience so as to be skilled and confident when a really important interview showed up. Besides, you couldn't lose. You never knew when you might hit the jackpot; some tycoon might fancy your style and offer you a smashing job. Just fancy taking Lulu out to paint the town red to celebrate, with no holds barred!

Things were different in my time, I pondered. I had had only seven interviews in all my business life, and four of those I mishandled abominably through unsophistication or ignorance. Twice the chief interviewers were low rats, to put it mildly, and got me at a disadvantage with trick questions or unexpected aggressiveness. If only I'd had more experience!

Tishy regarded me for a moment with the amused tolerance of the younger generation. 'S'pose that's the advantage of lots of dress rehearsals', he offered. 'Our chaps in costs have averaged nearly a dozen each already. We can handle any of these hot-rod spivs now, no foolin'.'

It's too late to turn the clock back in my own case, but I wonder if I should urge my staff to make trial applications for other jobs in the name of sophistication. They might discover how lucky they are at present . . . or they might discover how unlucky!

Instant Accounts and the Auditor

by R. S. WALDRON, F.C.A., F.A.C.C.A., C.P.A.

IT is one thing to accept that in this day and age accounts for shareholders must be presented more speedily than in the past. We do accept this, as members of a more sophisticated public, as analysts, or as professionals in our own sphere, because we know that it makes sense. Yet when, as accountants, we set about looking at our own part in the process we realize how difficult the matter is. Even if we could be certain that the business being subjected to audit was in full control of its own destinies, originating both inflow and outflow of physical goods, it would be difficult so to control records as to achieve a satisfactory accounting within a week or two of the chosen date.

In fact, the situation is very different. Businesses, particularly those engaged in manufacturing processes, are not their own masters. Goods ordered from suppliers arrive on various dates; manufacturing stops at the end of a day or week with products at all stages of processing; invoices for goods sent out may be delayed because of staff shortages (illness, holidays, etc). These are only some of the problems; and after the accounts are prepared they must be audited.

All these matters add up the time – time in getting a job done with pressures all around, and the developed instincts of the auditor warning him of the full dangers of undue haste and the virtues of accuracy. But any hold-up threatens delay for the entire programme with a publication date at the end of it.

Planning the accounting needs

Before looking at the audit difficulties, let us first consider the organization needed to produce speedy accounts, irrespective of auditing. For this purpose we shall imagine a medium-sized manufacturing unit employing around three hundred operatives.

No one can produce 'instant accounts' for a business of this size without careful and detailed planning before the accounting date itself. Perhaps the simplest approach is to look at the most difficult balance sheet items first: stock inventories, accounts receivable and accounts payable. Obviously as the year-end approaches all accounting must be kept as up to date as possible, but it is these three items in particular, which are especially affected by cut-off procedures, that merit special attention.

Stock control

It has to be recognized, of course, that stock-taking is a skilled business. Whether a business has a system of continuous inventory recording as a part of its own internal control or not, the relationship of physical stocks to book stocks, with the need to check one against the other and to deal with any consequent adjustments in the record, is most important. However, where such continuous records exist, physical stock-taking need not be carried out at the actual accounting date, provided (a) that the tests made at other dates give a satisfactory indication of the accuracy of the book records; (b) that there is adequate internal control; and (c) the stock-taking is customarily carried out by qualified staff.

This does not necessarily imply that the cross-check between physical and book stock need be a complete one on an earlier (interim) accounting date. Such tests may comprise a number of random checks carried out at convenient dates on various batches of stocks. However, on each such occasion, in order to afford proper reconciliations, the same cut-off procedures must be applied as would arise at a year-end.

Normally it is desirable to ensure that items brought into stocks are all represented by a liability (either paid or unpaid) in the books of account. This can be achieved even where suppliers are unable or unwilling to render their invoices at the time of delivery. One of the difficulties is the practice of some businesses of keeping back invoices received instead of entering them in the books – because of some query on the quantities, prices, etc. – and holding them in suspense at manager level. Obviously this must not be allowed to occur; in such a situation the matter must be taken up immediately (even if the invoice remains unpaid while the query is investigated, though sometimes it may be profitable to pay it without prejudice to the query if a discount would otherwise be lost).

A stock-taking procedure should therefore be laid down for use whenever periodic tests are applied. Having settled this, standing instructions should require all invoices received at any branch of the business to be passed to the accounts department for entry into the books, whatever the queries which may subsequently arise. Any query immediately apparent should be notified to the accounts department at the same time. In the case of goods received without

Plan now for your Company's growth

Why? Because in the next two years the purchase of plant and machinery in manufacturing industry is attracting higher cash grants: all tariffs between the countries of EFTA have now disappeared: it may not be long before the UK enters the Common Market: some deflation of domestic demand must soon take place.

So, despite historically high interest rates—in which few people expect a substantial fall—NOW is the time to install the new plant which will save in cost and provide the capacity you're going to need for both home and export trade.

This is the kind of investment in forward-looking firms that ICFC supports, and it is precisely the kind of help that the Corporation has given to over 1,800 small and medium-sized British companies since 1945.

ICFC provides a complete financial service to industry including the provision of long-term loans and/or share capital, plant purchase and leasing facilities, Stock Exchange flotations and practical advice and guidance.

We make certain that every customer gets the help he needs in a form that ensures healthy growth without financial strain, but we do not interfere in management.

invoice, the delivery note with a goods inwards record from a duplicate book should be passed to the accounts department. Any such notes not attached to an invoice at the accounting date will have to be provided for.

Accounts payable and receivable

This system will enable sums due for goods and supplies to be kept up to date, but will not normally cover services or 'accrued charges'. These are best controlled by a form of estimation based upon a 'budget ledger' in which services accounts are opened and in which (perhaps quarterly) charges are noted when incurred. Estimates are budgeted forward on an annual basis but are revised in the light of actual amounts paid, due regard being given to seasonal variations. It is usually convenient in any case to have a 'run-through' (say) one month before the accounting date, to see that any apparent inconsistencies in the listings are investigated at that date.

Receivable accounts similarly need to be controlled in advance of the accounting date, in order that any slow-moving and overdue accounts may be identified. It may be convenient to transfer these to a separate 'doubtful debts' ledger. Just as in any form of stock control the identification of doubtful (i.e. obsolete, damaged or otherwise difficult) stock is an essential function, so is it necessary in the case of debtors to have a means of review, not only at the annual accounting date, but at all times.

The auditor's task

If all the foregoing problems have been covered by some appropriate system such as that outlined, then the auditor's task is facilitated, especially if he also adopts a similar planning approach to his work.

The detailed audit work should be planned as well as carried out well in advance of the year-end. Starting with the internal control questionnaire (I.C.Q.) fairly early in the year, the audit may be arranged in detail and carried out during the period of the year, possibly concentrating – for obvious reasons – on the special testing of items outstanding at balancing dates in the second half of the period, but cumulatively disposing of routine audit tests of current income and expenditure at the interim visits.

If statistical sampling methods are used in routine tests, the population for testing purposes may be either that of a period extending back for twelve months to the previous accounting date, or each major period may be dealt with as containing its own separate population.

The I.C.Q. will in most cases be dealt with by the senior in charge of the audit before the work is commenced. Combined with the time-budget it will enable the 'through-the-year' work to be so planned as to direct specific attention to the points where the system is weakest. But clearly the senior should report to a partner or manager well before his accounting date arrives, otherwise timely decisions cannot be taken as to the need for further testing or detailed examination.

In some offices it is the custom for the I.C.Q. to be completed by the client's staff in outline (although flow-charts are more likely to be plotted by audit staff), whereas elsewhere it is entirely dealt with by the external auditors.

In fact, both the I.C.Q. and the use of statistical sampling techniques can save vital hours of routine audit work which may enable the final dates to be more readily adhered to. Nevertheless, it is in the field of asset verification (especially of stock inventories and accounts receivable) that such savings are critical.

At whatever date stock checks on significant items are planned, the auditors should be in attendance and should have an agreed role to play in the operation. So far as work in progress is concerned, a physical evaluation on the accounting date will be required; and if no other stock checks are to be made on that date (except, perhaps, on stores of fuel, etc.) this by itself will be a far easier task than full stock-taking.

Bank reconciliations will be necessary, as will the obtaining of certificates of securities, bank balances, land and other titles, and so forth, though these can be authorized in advance. The business records should enable certificates of stocks at public warehouses etc., to be readily obtained.

Most other schedules in the audit working papers file will be built up at interim visits to the point where brief adjustments will suffice to bring them up to the position at the accounting date, when a reassessment can be made of the final verifications that are necessary, having regard to the work already completed. If creditors or debtors are circularized, this can well have been done at (say) month ten of a twelve-month period.

Is the result sufficiently accurate?

Purists will no doubt quarrel with methods, such as those outlined, designed for the speedy production of accounts. Apart from the need to reappraise stock values in terms of current market values (a task which will itself take time), they will say that no such accounting arrangements can possibly produce accurate accounts.

Possibly the only answer to such criticism is that the accounts of companies are required to show a true and fair view rather than a true and correct view; and while no doubt some late invoices etc., would be entered into the books more accurately if they were left open for several weeks after the year-end, it is doubtful whether the overall results would prove to be significantly more accurate.

It has to be accepted that accounts, for any useful purpose, must be up to date. Since the process of finalizing the tax requirements and the distributable balance, together with the time for legal requirements, printing work and so on, all combine to delay the arrival of reports on shareholders' breakfast tables, any method of facilitating the speedier preparation and finalizing of accounts, which does not significantly impair accuracy so as to endanger the true and fair view, must be equally acceptable.

Betterment Levy – VI

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

THE Land Commission Act contains eight sections which confer special exemption from levy either outright or at the discretion of the Commission. These exemptions apply at all times after the Act came into operation on April 6th, 1967, and are in addition to the cases where levy might have been avoided by starting a project of material development before that date and completing it afterwards.

Local authorities

Section 56 exempts from levy under Case C the following 'bodies':

- (a) any local authority as defined in section 99 (8) and section 221 (1) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1962;
- (b) any development corporation established under the New Towns Act 1965 or under the enactments repealed by that Act;
- (c) the Commission for New Towns;
- (d) the Highlands and Islands Development Board;
- (e) the Housing Corporation;
- (f) any housing society as defined by section 1 (7) of the Housing Act 1964;
- (g) the Scottish Special Housing Association;
- (h) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

The exemption applies to a project of material development in respect of:

- (i) any assessable interest in the land comprised in the project, or in part of that land which, on the date on which the project is begun, is vested in one of the above bodies; or
- (ii) any other assessable interest by virtue of which such a body is the developing owner. As has been seen, the 'developing owner' is the person who owns, or is able to acquire, an interest in all the land to be developed and is in possession of the land on which a 'specified operation' (see section 64 (3)) marking the beginning of the project is started (section 32 (5)).

Where a body to which section 56 applies is the developing owner, it is not necessary to notify the Commission under section 38 before the project is begun.

Charities

Section 57 provides that no levy is to be chargeable under Case C where, on the date on which a project of material development is begun, an assessable interest in the land comprised in the project, or in part of that land, is held by or in trust for a charity (which means any institution or other organization established for charitable purposes only) and either:

- (a) the interest in question forms part of the permanent endowment of the charity; or
- (b) the land in which the interest subsists has been used wholly or mainly for the purposes of the charity for a period of not less than a year and, if it has ceased to be so used, has not since the end of that period been used wholly or mainly for non-charitable purposes for more than five years; or
- (c) the project is to be carried out wholly or mainly for the purposes of the charity.

For the purposes of section 57

- (i) a charity will be taken to have a permanent endowment unless all property held for the purposes of the charity may be expended for those purposes without distinction between capital and income; and
- (ii) an interest in land held by or in trust for a charity will be taken to form part of its permanent endowment if, on a sale of that interest, the net proceeds of sale would be subject to a restriction on their being so expended.

It will thus be seen that the exemption conferred on charities by section 57, unlike that conferred on local authorities and other public bodies by section 56, is limited in character.

Statutory undertakers

Section 58 applies to the National Coal Board and to 'statutory undertakers' which are defined by section 99 (8) and section 221 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1962 as meaning persons authorized by any enactment to carry on any railway, light railway, tramway, road transport, water transport, canal, inland navigation, dock, harbour, pier or lighthouse undertaking or any undertaking for the supply of electricity, gas, hydraulic power or water.

Statutory undertakers and the National Coal Board are exempt from levy under Case C in respect of their operational land or in respect of land which has been operational land for at least one year and has not since been appropriated to other uses for more than five years before the date of commencement of the project.

Housing associations

A housing association is exempt from levy under Case C in respect of any chargeable act or event where:

- (a) on the date on which the carrying out of a project of material development is begun, an interest in the land comprised in the project, or in part of that land, is held by or in trust for the association; and

- (b) the Minister of Housing and Local Government issues a certificate that it is in the public interest that the chargeable act or event to which the project relates should be exempt from levy. The matter is one for the Minister to decide and there is no appeal from his decision.

'Housing association' has the meaning assigned to it by section 189 (1) of the Housing Act 1957 and accordingly means a society, body of trustees, or company established for the purposes of, or amongst whose objects or powers are included those of, constructing, improving or managing or facilitating or encouraging the construction or improvement of, houses, being a society, body of trustees or company who do not trade for profit or whose constitution or rules prohibit the issue of any capital with interest or dividend exceeding the rate for the time being prescribed by the Treasury (section 59).

Development shortly after disposition

Sections 56 to 59, above, confer an automatic exemption from levy. Under section 60 exemption may be granted at the discretion of the Commission where the following six conditions are satisfied, viz:

- (a) the application for exemption is made by the grantee under a disposition falling within Case A or Case B (sale or grant of a tenancy) and the disposition takes place on or after April 6th, 1967;
- (b) the Case C project is carried out in accordance with planning permission in force at the date of the Case A or Case B disposition, though the permission may have been granted to someone other than the grantee;
- (c) the application is made within thirty days of the disposition under Case A or Case B (or such other period as the Commission may allow) and contains the particulars prescribed by the Betterment Levy (Notification) Regulations 1967 (No. 309);
- (d) the Commission are satisfied that the project will begin to be carried out before the end of two years commencing with the date of the disposition;
- (e) the project commenced is the project to which the application relates, and no other material development on the land comprised in the Case A or Case B disposition is started before the end of the two-year period;
- (f) the Commission are satisfied that the project will extend to the whole of the land comprised in the Case A or Case B disposition.

If the Commission are satisfied that these conditions are or will be satisfied, they may give a direction that no levy in Case C will be chargeable in respect of the project to which the application relates. In that event it will be unnecessary to give notice to the Commission under section 38 of intention to start a project of material development, as the application will be treated as if it were a notice under that section. Section 60 may be particularly useful where there are multiple transactions of leasing and leasing back, involving development companies and local authorities, in which the incidence of levy on the successive chargeable acts or events might otherwise be unintentionally heavy.

Single family dwelling-house

Section 61 allows a person to build a single dwelling-house on land which he owned or in which he had an interest before September 23rd, 1965 (White Paper day), free of levy under Case C, provided that the house is to be used by the owner himself or by an 'adult member' of the owner's family as his or her only or main residence. For this purpose the building of a dwelling-house includes the construction or laying out of a garage, outhouse, garden, yard, court, forecourt or other appurtenance for occupation with, and for the purposes of, the dwelling-house.

A person is an 'adult member' of the owner's family if he or she is:

- (a) the owner's wife or husband; or
- (b) a son or daughter of the owner, or of the owner's wife or husband, who has attained the age of 18; or
- (c) the father or mother of the owner, or of the owner's wife or husband.

The building of a single dwelling-house for the owner's in-laws is thus covered by the exemption. Moreover, any reference to a son or daughter includes a reference to a stepson or stepdaughter, an illegitimate son or daughter and any adopted son or daughter.

There are six further points to be noted:

- (a) the notice of intention to carry out a project of material development served on the Commission under section 38 must claim exemption from levy in respect of the dwelling-house;
- (b) while the interest in the land on which the house is to be built must have been acquired before September 23rd, 1965, it is sufficient if planning permission for the building of the house is obtained after that date;
- (c) once a person has obtained exemption from levy in respect of the building of a single house under section 61, he becomes ineligible to receive the benefit again in any circumstances;
- (d) the person for whom the house is being built must be the first person to occupy the house, and such person must continue to occupy the house for at least six months or, where he dies after having occupied it for less than six months, until his death;
- (e) if at the same time a person serves notice on the Commission under section 38 claiming exemption from levy under section 61 for two or more houses, whether standing on the same plot of land or on separate plots, the Commission may give a direction specifying which house shall, and which house or houses shall not, receive exemption from levy;

- (f) if a person has claimed the benefit of exemption from levy in respect of the building of a house for a named adult member of his family, he may substitute the name of another adult member of his family at any time before the building of the dwelling-house is begun. Under section 64 (3) the building is begun when a 'specified operation', such as the digging of a trench to take the foundations, is commenced.

Builders and developers

Section 62 confers a limited but useful exemption from levy under Case C on a 'builder or developer of residential property', which means any person who immediately before September 23rd, 1965, was carrying on a business which:

- (a) consisted wholly or mainly of the carrying out of building operations, or of building and engineering operations, and included the building of houses, flats or other dwellings; or
- (b) consisted wholly or mainly of building, or arranging for the building of, houses, flats or other dwellings and (in the capacity of owner of the fee simple or of holder of a tenancy of the land comprising the houses, flats or other dwellings) of selling or letting them.

Thus a builder or developer who went out of business shortly before September 23rd, 1965, but resumed operations after that date will not qualify for exemption because he was not carrying on business immediately before September 23rd, 1965 (subsection (7)).

The following conditions must be fulfilled:

- (i) the builder or developer must be the 'developing owner' and must have owned or been the lessee of the land on which the development is to take place before September 23rd, 1965, or must have been under an enforceable contract at that date to buy or take a lease of the land;
- (ii) planning permission for the carrying out of material development in respect of the whole of the land comprised in the project must have been in force immediately before September 23rd, 1965; but the kind of development covered by the planning permission obtained before September 23rd, 1965, need not be the kind of development which the builder or developer is proposing to carry out under section 62. An outline planning permission obtained before September 23rd, 1965, will also suffice, and if that permission contains any requirement as to subsequent approval, such requirement is to be disregarded for the purposes of section 62. Moreover, 'planning permission' includes a planning permission granted after September 23rd, 1965, by the Minister on an appeal to him under section 23 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1962 against a decision or deemed decision of the local planning authority made before that date (subsections (3) and (4)).

(It is to be remembered that a planning decision is 'made' by a local planning authority when the appropriate resolution granting or refusing the permission is passed by the authority, even though the decision may not be communicated to the applicant for planning permission until some time later. There may therefore be cases where planning permission was actually granted before September 23rd, 1965, although the result of the application was not notified to the builder or developer until after that date);

- (iii) the project of material development must consist exclusively of 'the provision of housing accommodation' or be a project in respect of which the Commission are satisfied:

- (a) that the principal purpose of the project is the provision of housing accommodation; and
- (b) that, in so far as the project consists of the erection or construction of buildings or works not comprised in the provision of housing accommodation, the erection or construction of those buildings or works is subsidiary to the principal purpose of the project and will be of benefit to persons living in any houses, flats or other dwellings which are to be provided in pursuance of the project (subsection (2)).

'The provision of housing accommodation' means the building of one or more houses, flats or other dwellings and the execution of all or any of the following works, viz:

- (a) the provision of road, drains or other services ancillary to all or any of those houses, flats or other dwellings, including the provision of common services and parts in a building containing two or more flats or other dwellings; and
- (b) the construction or laying out of any garage, outhouse, garden, yard, court, forecourt or other appurtenance for occupation with, or for the purposes of, all or any of those houses, flats or other dwellings.

If the foregoing provisions and conditions are satisfied, then a 'builder or developer' (as defined) can claim, and usually successfully claim, exemption from levy under section 62. The only matter within the discretion of the Commission falls within subsection (2), when the Commission have to be satisfied that development which is not of itself housing development is nevertheless being carried out in association with housing development and will be of benefit to persons living in any houses, flats or other dwellings provided in pursuance of the project. There is no appeal from the Commission's decision.

The claim is made by the builder or developer serving on the Commission a notice under section 38 of intention to carry out a project of material development and including in the notice the particulars specified in the Betterment Levy (Notification) Regulations 1967. Under paragraph 6 of the Regulations these particulars must be given to the Commission before November 1st, 1967, or such later date as the Commission may in any particular case direct. The particulars comprise:

- (1) the name and address of the claimant;
- (2) evidence that immediately before September 23rd, 1965, the claimant carried on business as a builder or developer;

- (3) the situation of the land which is the subject of the claim;
- (4) details of every interest or contract affecting the land which subsisted on September 23rd, 1965, and a statement whether or not the interest has since been disposed of;
- (5) details of any planning permission in force on September 23rd, 1965, or granted on or after that date on appeal.

Author's correction: In the issue of March 25th, page 369, the Schedule 5 base value of £2,158 should have been deducted from, not added to, the capitalized value of the rent etc. of £19,000, making £16,842 and a net development value of £16,410, not £20,726.

Audit Inquiries into Management Forecasts

by A. G. NORMAN, C.B.E., D.F.C.

Deputy President, Confederation of British Industry

AS I have never been subjected to any course of training in any form of audit procedures, clearly the only useful approach that I can take to this subject is from the angle of the benefits which I think business management must expect to derive from inquiries of this nature. Any form of inquiry takes time and therefore uses that very expensive commodity, salary. It is an overhead and as such it must make a positive contribution to management skill. If it is purely negative then it has no place in efficient company management.

This type of audit inquiry, which I frankly prefer to call a review, is essentially of a management calibre directed towards seeing and understanding how good or how bad we have been in our actual performance against standards which we ourselves set – whether we are talking of a review of operating forecasts, new investment, machine installations, or what you will.

Now while it is, of course, of first importance to know the reasons for failure to achieve forecasts it is every bit as important to inquire into the reasons for success. There is certainly considerable value in knowing where mistakes have been made in order to profit by experience, but there is equal value in knowing where right decisions have been taken in order to utilize that knowledge better to plan the future.

I think that the subject can conveniently be divided into four broad areas:

- (a) Why have audit inquiries?

- (b) When should they be done?
- (c) How are they done?
- (d) What benefit must be gained from them?

Why are audits done?

These special reviews or audit inquiries are instituted to enable management constantly to re-assess the basis of its commercial judgement, and to ensure that any errors which have been made are understood and appreciated and that repetition is avoided. Equally, they should be undertaken to ensure that correct judgement is highlighted and the reasoning and justification behind it utilized in assessing other plans and projects.

It is essential to all levels of management to know the reasons for the successes and failures of its policies:

- (i) to ensure that an overall policy is maintained;
- (ii) to be better able to assess the calibre of judgement of junior managers who have been involved in the plans;
- (iii) to take corrective action to rectify or eliminate losing activities and areas of operation;
- (iv) to reward success.

Inquiries must not be limited only in financial terms. They must extend into technical progress, market trends and development, competitor activity and present trends. They must also extend into fields of sales and marketing policies, buying and production efficiencies, and the efficiencies of the administrative functions as a whole – personnel, financial and secretarial aspects.

An address delivered at a luncheon meeting of The Institute of Internal Auditors, London Chapter, on April 12th.

Inquiries must clearly indicate the extent to which deviations have arisen from causes under our control, i.e. expressed in the simplest terms, the fact that more money has been spent than was anticipated in the forecast. They must also highlight deviations arising from causes outside our direct control in order that management can assess whether, with reasonable skills, these deviations could have been anticipated and correct action taken at an earlier stage (for example, the actions of competitors, engineering efficiencies, etc.).

It is fundamental to any positive use being gained from an audit inquiry that a proper basis of accountability is established throughout at all levels.

When should an inquiry be carried out?

The initial inquiry must be made when the forecast or plan is submitted for management decision. Without a thorough inquiry by management at that time, the chances of disappointments and disasters must be greater.

From then on reviews must be made at regular short-term intervals. They have no value unless the practice is kept up to date. No advantage is gained in finding out where one has gone wrong months after the event because by then other circumstances will have changed and the action taken to rectify an historical fault may well prove to be entirely wrong.

To be of value reviews must, as far as it is practicable, be carried out on a month-to-month basis so that warning signals are visible early.

Any plan or forecast should be broken down into its smallest practical component part in terms of time. At top management level this can rarely usefully be done at less than monthly intervals, and in some respects it is advantageous that the interval is longer in order that trends and indications are more clearly shown. At shop floor level, however, it can quite feasibly be done on a day-to-day basis in terms of machine efficiencies, scrap performance, labour efficiency, etc.

In this way however long the period of the forecast may be, because it is constantly under review – although the forecast may not be achieved – we shall certainly know that we have done our best to achieve it, that we have taken the best possible policy decisions from time to time and we shall not suddenly find ourselves being caught out.

How is an audit inquiry carried out?

My personal view is that inquiries of this nature are best handled and have the greatest impact and effect if they are the responsibility of management itself at all levels. This demands that there should be an efficient and progressive monitoring reporting system in existence, combined with a high degree of technical, financial and accounting skill to enable management to maintain its own procedures as time goes along.

Emphasis should be placed on the fact that this is not an inquiry into the correctness and extreme accuracy of financial figures such as happens annually for statutory audit purposes. This is not to say, of course, that staff permanently involved on internal audit work is an unnecessary luxury. In very large organizations permanent internal audit procedures are undoubtedly an essential, due to the remoteness of top management from the many units in the field. Even in a smaller size of company, a team of men must be available for use on special operations of this nature where they are of a complex character demanding special skills or where immediate urgency is called for.

An audit inquiry is only of value if the plan which is being reviewed is properly and effectively drawn up on an acceptable basis. It also can only be effective if the results of the plan are based on the same fundamental underlying issues as were put into the plan in the first place, i.e. there must be consistency in approach to get a correct evaluation.

Successes to be derived from any inquiry require proper and efficient procedures for the accumulation and reporting of information – this is an area which is frequently neglected.

The inquiry must ruthlessly expose the best and worst aspects of the results of all plans and ventures – we cannot afford to have areas of failure withheld from us because they are overshadowed by greater areas of success.

The result of the inquiry, however complex and detailed, must be in clear and lucid form so that it is easily understood and interpreted by management at all levels. Without this it is not possible to explain faults and to establish responsibilities.

Equally, the inquiry must establish clearly the underlying causes of any variances, whether good or bad. This may well involve expert statistical analysis, for example, of market conditions related to one's own achievement. It is highly dangerous to accept too readily that failure to achieve the sales figures is due to the national economy. In this way sales inefficiency can quite easily be clouded by economic conditions which, in fact, may only have contributed in small part to the deviations.

What benefits come from an audit inquiry?

I said at the beginning that any inquiry must have a positive contribution. It must also be an objective to establish in everyone's mind that it is not a witch hunt. It produces no advantage unless it is a help to managers at all levels to manage better to avoid repeating mistakes; to be able to take early corrective action; to provide a practical basis for reconsidering policy decisions; and to be directly related to the main objective of improving overall profitability.

If properly done and carried out on a regular basis whilst knowledge is fresh, the inquiry can have nothing but advantage and merit to any organization.

To be successful demands that managers should themselves feel committed to their plans, and that they accept that they are to be judged on their performance against these plans. This of itself demands that within the company organization, the responsibility of managers for decisions and the authority given to them, must at all stages be clearly defined and understood.

Properly used and properly carried out, the practice of audit inquiry is an essential aid to management in improving its own profitability and its efficiencies. Just as important, it will also – in weeding out the good from the bad – represent a basis for incentive within the company itself for rewarding success. Equally, it will highlight failure.

In conclusion, I would make the comment that the activities of your Institute – and, indeed, all I have been saying today – are concerned with the most important topic in Britain today – namely, the need for greater efficiency. There can be little doubt that the solution to the country's economic, political and social problems can only be found through a sharp improvement in the efficiency with which Government, industry and the trade unions face the present and the future.

There is, I believe, a growing realization that a high standard of living cannot be maintained – let alone improved – unless it is earned by more effective use of our great national resources.

However, I leave you with the thought that efficient management does not grow on trees, and I would remind you that it was William Pitt in 1799, in talking of income tax, who wisely pointed out that good taxation policies require that tax should be applied to the fruit and not to the tree itself. In my view, our taxation system not only attacks the tree but has, for a long time, been hacking away at the roots of our efficiency in this country. Until we can find a Government which is courageous enough to shift the main burden of taxation from taxes on effort to taxes on expenditure, we have slender hopes of growing the efficient managers and business men on whom our economic future so largely depends.

Taxation Cases

Campbell and Fairfax-Jones (Davies's Educational Trust) v. C.I.R.

In the Court of Appeal – February 13th, 1967

Income tax – Annual payments – To charity trustees – Advance by trustees to covenantor – Trustees buying covenantor's business – Whether covenanted payments income or capital of trustees – Whether repayment of tax obtainable – Income Tax Act 1952, sections 122, 123 (Case III), 169, 447 (1) (b).

The tutorial business of Davies's was owned by Davies's (Tutors) Ltd, which was incorporated in 1946. The directors and majority shareholders were Mr Campbell, Mr McBride and Mr Hall. Mr Fairfax-Jones was the secretary.

On March 29th, 1961, Mr Campbell and Mr Fairfax-Jones executed a deed establishing The Davies's Educational Trust. The deed declared them to be the first trustees; and the trust fund was to be all money and other property to be received and held on the trusts of the deed. By clause 3 the trust fund was to be held upon charitable trusts for the promotion and furtherance of education. On March 30th, 1961, Davies's (Tutors) Ltd executed a deed of covenant in favour of the trustees, whereby Tutors covenanted that it would, out of the general fund of taxed income of Tutors annually on April 5th in every year for seven years commencing on April 5th, 1961, pay to the trustees to hold upon the declaration of trust such a sum as would amount to 80 per cent of the profits or gains accruing to the company from any trade carried on by the company in the accounting year immediately preceding such April 5th.

The trust deed and the deed of covenant were executed on the clear understanding that the net sums payable under the latter deed, together with the income tax revocable thereon, would be used by the trustees to purchase the business of Tutors. On April 4th, 1962, Davies's Educational Developments Ltd was incorporated to promote educational work of every description. Only two shares of £1 each were issued, one to Mr Campbell and the other to Mr Hall, and the two shares were held by them on behalf of the trustees of The Davies's Educational Trust. The directors of Developments were Mr Campbell, Mr McBride and Mr Hall.

On April 5th, 1962, Tutors entered into partnership with Development. The value of the Davies's business was agreed at £50,000, and under the partnership agreement Developments purchased from Tutors a one-fifth share of the goodwill of Davies's for £10,000, and Developments was given the right to acquire all the residue of the goodwill either wholly or in proportions from year to year. The profits of Davies's were to be divided in accordance with the proportions of the goodwill owned by Tutors and Developments from time to time.

On April 5th, 1961, and April 5th, 1962, Tutors owed the trustees sums totalling to £25,527 and Tutors paid the sums subject to deduction of tax. On April 5th, 1963, Tutors owed a further sum of £10,456, which it also paid subject to deduction of tax. The net amounts thus received by the trustees came to about £21,900 in the aggregate. During 1962–63 the trustees advanced £21,900 to Developments, and that company used £10,000 to purchase its one-fifth share in the goodwill of Tutors, and £11,900 to purchase some assets of Tutors pursuant to the partnership deed.

The trustees claimed repayment of the tax deducted from the sums they had received from Tutors for 1960-61 and 1961-62. The Revenue admitted that the trustees were trustees for charitable purposes only, and that the advance of £21,900 was an application of income within section 447 (1) (b) of the Income Tax Act 1952. They contended, however, that the covenanted sums were not annual payments, because they were not pure profit in the hands of the trustees, in that the sums had to be applied by the trustees in purchasing the business of Tutors. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the Revenue.

Held (affirming the judgment of Mr Justice Buckley, but on different grounds): the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

C.I.R. v. Saxone, Lilley & Skinner (Holdings) Ltd

In the House of Lords - February 16th, 1967

Income tax - Capital allowances - Trade of storage of manufactured goods not yet delivered - Central warehouse for group companies - Storage of shoes - Some manufactured by group but not yet delivered - Others bought by group from manufacturer - Whether industrial building or structure - Income Tax Act 1952, section 271 (1) (d) (iii), (2).

The appellant company erected a building and let it to one of its subsidiaries carrying on the business of the warehousing of shoes. The building, a large one, provided a central warehouse for all the companies in the appellant's group, and it had a very substantial turnover of shoes every year, though each pair of shoes remained in the warehouse for only a few weeks. The shoes fall into two categories: (1) those manufactured by a member of the group, but not yet delivered to a purchaser; (2) those bought by a member of the group from a manufacturer, whether inside or outside the group.

The appellant claimed capital allowances in respect of the building. The Inland Revenue contended that the warehouse was not in use for the purposes of a trade consisting in the storage of goods or materials, but was a distribution centre for the group. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the Revenue. In the Court of Session it was further argued that the appellant's claim was defeated by section 271 (3), because the building was in use for a purpose ancillary to the purposes of a retail shop.

Held (affirming the decision of the Court of Session): the warehouse was an industrial building within section 271 of the Income Tax Act 1952.

Educational Grants Association Ltd v. C.I.R.

In the Court of Appeal - February 16th, 1967

Income tax - Exemption for charities - Company for advancement of education - Income largely from one company - Grants largely to children connected with that company - Whether income applied to charitable purposes - Income Tax Act 1952, section 447 (1) (b).

The respondent company (the Association), limited by guarantee, had as its main object:

'To advance education in such ways as shall from time to time be thought fit and in particular by making grants to or for the benefit of and for the education of all such persons as shall be considered likely to benefit from education at a preparatory, public or other independent school.'

The Association was promoted by a director of a company, and was closely connected with that company, as were its directors. The meetings of the Association's council of management were held at the company's office. The income of the Association was mainly derived from the company, and the children for whom grants were made were principally (but not entirely) connected with employees or past employees of the company. Senior officials of the company were apprized of the facilities available from the Association. These facilities were not published otherwise. The Association claimed repayment of tax deducted at source from its income.

It was contended for the Association that its grants were applications of its income for charitable purposes only. The Revenue admitted that the Association's purpose was exclusively charitable, but contended that the application of income for the benefit of children connected with the company in question, without inviting entries from elsewhere, was not an application for charitable purposes only within the meaning of section 447 (1) (b) of the Income Tax Act 1952. The Special Commissioners allowed the claim for repayment of tax.

Held (affirming the decision of Mr Justice Pennycuik): there was no element of public benefit in the grants made in respect of children connected with the Metal Box Co Ltd; and that the claim for repayment of tax failed in relation to those grants.

In re Lady Harmsworth's Estate

In the Court of Appeal - March 1st, 1967

Estate duty - Annuity - Conditional on annuitant's will leaving assets on certain trusts - Acceptance by annuitant - Assets bequeathed by annuitant accordingly - Whether assets passed by purchase - Whether nevertheless dutiable as disposition in favour of a relative - Date from which interest on estate duty payable - Finance Act 1894, sections 1, 2 (1) (b), 2 (1) (c), 2 (1) (d), (3), 7, 10 - Finance Act 1940, section 44.

The deceased's husband, who died in 1937, bequeathed to her an annuity of £5,000 upon the terms that, within three months of his death, she would agree to hold half of the income producing assets, to which she was entitled at his death, on trust for herself for life, and would bequeath that half upon the same trusts as those of her husband's residuary estate. The husband's trustees were empowered to agree as to what should be a fair and reasonable performance of the condition on which the bequest of the annuity was made. The deceased did not share in the residue of her husband's estate. At the date of her husband's death the deceased had income-producing investments of a value of about £88,000.

Within three months of her husband's death the deceased gave notice that she accepted the conditional annuity; and agreed that she would hold half of the said income-producing assets as required by her husband's will; and that no change in the investment of those assets would be made without the consent of her husband's trustees. The deceased died in 1963, having received the annuity of £5,000 down to the date of her death. Her said income-producing assets were left as a separate fund. By her will the deceased bequeathed that fund on the same trusts as those of her husband's residuary estate 'to indicate [probably "implement"] the obligation imposed upon me by my agreement with the executors of my late husband's will'.

At the date of the deceased's death the value of the fund was about £186,000, and estate duty of more than £102,300 was paid on it. The deceased's executors were later advised that no estate duty was thus payable because of section 3 of the Finance Act 1894. They claimed repayment, but this was refused, and they then applied, under section 10 of the Act, for the determination by the Court of the duty payable in respect of the deceased's estate.

It was contended by the Revenue (1) that on the facts there had not been a purchase of the assets in the separate fund, as there had been no consensus; (2) that, by section 44 (1) (a) of the Finance Act 1940, as amended, the annuity could not be treated as consideration for the bequest of those assets, as the persons interested in the residue of the husband's estate were relatives of the deceased; (3) that if any interest was payable on the £102,300, it ran from the date when the claim for repayment was made, and not from the date of the husband's death.

Held (varying the decision of Mr Justice Buckley): (1) the facts established a sale of the assets in question; (2) section 44 of the Finance Act 1940, as amended, applied to the case; (3) the amount of duty payable was £3,505 19s; (4) £103,409 5s 4d was repayable to the executors.

Tapper v. Eyre

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) – March 1st, 1967

(Before Mr Justice STARUP)

Income tax – Investment allowance – Machinery or plant – Road vehicle – Whether of type not commonly used as private vehicles – Whether unsuitable to be so used – Finance Act 1954, section 16 – Vehicles (Excise) Act 1962, Schedule 5, paragraph 2 (c).

The respondent, a radio engineer, bought an Austin Mini van for £400 for the purposes of his business. No modifications were made to the van. There were advertisements relating to the taxpayer's business on the sides of the van, and it was fitted with a roof-rack to carry materials used in the business. The taxpayer had a C licence for the van, and the vehicle was used solely for business purposes. The taxpayer had a car for private purposes. There was evidence that, of all the small Austin and Morris vans first licensed in 1964, 36 per cent had been licensed as goods vehicles, and the remainder as other vehicles under paragraph 2 (c) of Schedule 5 to the Vehicles (Excise) Act 1962. The proportions for small Austin vans, taken separately, were the same.

The General Commissioners decided in favour of the taxpayer.

Held: the evidence before the General Commissioners did not support this conclusion.

In re Gartside's Will Trusts

In the Court of Appeal – March 2nd, 1967

Estate duty – Shares of residue on discretionary trusts during son's life – Surplus income accumulated – After son's death capital and income for his children with remainders over – Power of advancement – Exercise in favour of two of son's children – Son dying shortly afterwards – Whether children had had interests in possession – Finance Act 1894, sections 1, 2 (1) (b) – Finance Act 1940, section 43.

The testator made his will in 1934 and died in 1941. The will gave a one-fourth share of residue on discretionary trusts during his son's lifetime for applying the income wholly or partly as the trustees thought fit for the benefit of the son and his wife and children. After the son's death, the capital and income were to go to the son's children on attaining 21 or, being female, marrying under that age; and there were remainders over. Surplus income was to be accumulated during the son's life, to follow his one-fourth share, but resort could be had to the accumulations. In 1961 the net income was about £3,900 a year. In May 1961, £786 of income was paid under the discretionary trusts for the benefit of the testator's son, and in the next month £50 was similarly applied.

In 1962 the trustees exercised their power of advancement in favour of the testator's two grandsons, and the advancement was by the making of a settlement on each of them. In each settlement the amount advanced was a quarter of the son's quarter share of the trust fund, exclusive of accumulations. In the events which happened the grandsons became entitled under their settlements to demand the transfer of the sums advanced if they became 21. From the date of the advancement all the trust income was paid to the son. In January 1962, the accumulations came to more than £55,000, and the value of the son's quarter share was £93,700. In the same month the accumulations period ended, and in May 1963, the son died. At the date of his death the value of the advance to each grandson was £23,500. Estate duty was claimed on the son's death on each of the amounts advanced.

It was contended by the Revenue that under section 43 of the Finance Act 1940, an interest limited to cease on a death had been determined after becoming an interest in possession, in that each of the grandsons had had an interest in possession as a discretionary beneficiary. It was contended that 'interest in possession' in the section was any interest which related to current income; and alternatively that the right of the discretionary beneficiaries to have a proper exercise of the discretion as to income by the trustees was an interest related to current income, as was also the right of those interested in the accumulations to have the trustees accumulate current income subject to a proper exercise of their discretion.

Held (reversing the decision of Mr Justice Ungood-Thomas): the objects of the discretionary trust had an interest in possession in the advanced amounts before the date of the advancements; and that section 43 of the Finance Act 1940 was applicable.

The future of the profession

THE accountancy profession is undergoing a more profound change than at any time since the turn of the century. Higher standards of education in the country generally, the advent of the computer, the development of new auditing techniques, a flood of complex fiscal and commercial legislation, amalgamations in industry to take advantage of economies of scale in production and to prepare for entry into the Common Market, more sophisticated management techniques and a shortage of qualified accountants. These are some of the factors which caused the Council in 1964 to set up a committee to reappraise the Institute's education and training policies and its long-term objectives.

The main inquiries lay along the lines which are set out on page [516] of the annual report.

After preliminary study the Institute, in March 1966, invited The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland and The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants and The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants to joint discussions. It was soon found that there was an encouraging degree of unanimity among all the participating bodies and, by the end of 1966, a scheme had been rough hewn. Progress was checked because it was not possible to obtain from the Government a decision as to whether it would introduce legislation to deal with certain aspects of the scheme. In February 1967 the Government intimated that it wished to have certain general questions, which affect all professions, examined by the Monopolies Commission and a decision on the question of legislation would have to await the result of this general inquiry. This is expected to take at least two years to complete.

In consequence the scheme must now be re-examined in the context that legislation will not be available, at least in the immediate future. If a workable scheme can be devised it is hoped to circulate it to all members for their consideration later this year. Meetings to ascertain the views of members will then be held in the districts, after which it is expected that a formal meeting will be held in London in the winter of 1967-68 so that members may vote upon the scheme as a whole.

It is not possible to give further details at this stage except to say that the objects which the participating bodies have throughout had in mind are to raise the standards of education, training and professional attainment so that the public may be served to the best advantage.

A move in the direction of closer co-operation between the accountancy bodies in Great Britain was the submission in January 1967 of a joint memorandum to the President of the Board of Trade on behalf of this Institute, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants on the Companies Bill.

Other trends

The accountancy profession is drawing closer to the universities and those colleges of further education which have been provisionally designated as polytechnics; this is not to replace practical training but to provide a broad general education in accountancy and its related subjects at an early stage in a student's career.

The range and depth of knowledge required by our members, in order to serve their clients and employers properly, means that post-qualification specialization will be more and more necessary in future. This will increase the need for members in practice and the public to seek the advice of specialists and consultants and to take second opinions. A way must be found to overcome the ethical problems and the tensions which sometimes arise in consequence.

Post-qualification courses have been a prominent feature of the Institute's work in recent years. The gross cost of the courses run by the Institute last year, which was fully recovered in course fees, was over £100,000. In addition, numerous courses, seminars and lectures were held in the areas of each of the district societies.

I think that the growing need for specialization will shortly make it necessary for us to examine afresh the whole subject of post-qualification training and education, including the nature and extent of the courses which are run by the Institute and in the districts.

The Institute's impressive list of publications on accountancy principles and other technical subjects is likely to increase. Efforts must also be made to stimulate the publication of good textbooks, of which there is a shortage both for students and qualified members. Last and by no means least there is a serious lack of teachers in accountancy without whom any programme for improving education and training in the profession must fail.

Professional standards

Standards of professional work may fall below an acceptable level for a variety of reasons; for example, a failure to keep up to date, illness, pressure of work, and shortage of staff. At its meeting in April 1967 the Council appointed a standing committee charged with the task of improving professional standards of performance. Its object will be to help the membership and it will have no disciplinary powers. It has yet to settle its detailed method of operation but, when cases come to its notice, it will point out to members and ask for their comments upon apparent departures from 'best practice' and the requirements, inter alia, of the Companies Acts and the rules laid down by professional and other bodies which affect the work of our members. It will endeavour to arrange help for members who are ill or temporarily overburdened with work; it will be available to advise members who are faced with problems involving professional standards. The committee's task is a heavy one and it will be necessary in many cases to ask for help from the district societies. In the long term, this work should have far-reaching effects.

Auditing

The basic role of the practising accountant is that of auditor and it is his work in this field which probably makes the greatest impact on the public. In recent years improved techniques have enabled his work to be more penetrating in character and of more constructive help to management. The Council is endeavouring to encourage the more general use of these techniques. During the year district societies were therefore asked to help members by mounting courses on this subject and by encouraging members who are not regular course-goers to attend them. The Institute also ran a pilot course in London for potential lecturers and it is building up a panel of members who, with material provided by the Institute, will be willing to help district societies on this subject.

Recruitment

About two thousand new members qualify each year but a 5 per cent yearly increase in membership is insufficient to keep pace with the growing demands in practice, in industry and the public service. Current educational developments are intended to ensure that students attain membership with a minimum of wastage and delay but it remains necessary to attract the interest of more young men and women of the right calibre. The Institute's advertising campaign in the national Press is being continued and more direct contacts with schools and universities are being sought. In addition, a committee has been set up to examine the whole of the recruitment problem, both short-term and over the next twenty years; it has been asked to cover salaries, conditions of service and other relevant matters. When its report has been received the Council will consider any further changes which are needed in its recruitment policy.

Overseas

During the year I have paid official visits to Canada, the United States, Malaysia, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand; I also spent a week in Baden-Baden attending meetings and a study conference organized by U.E.C. in which our members joined in the discussion of European accounting topics. Except in the case of Baden-Baden I was accompanied by the Secretary of the Institute. In each case I had discussions with the Council, or senior members, of the professional bodies in those countries and in most countries I delivered an address giving an outline of developments in the accountancy profession in this country. These visits were noteworthy for the warmth of the hospitality extended to the Institute's representatives and for the esteem in which the Institute is held overseas. The visits to Canada and the United States gave birth to a study group with colleagues in those countries which is referred to in the annual report on page [520].

The work of the Institute

From time to time inquiries are addressed to the Institute asking how the members' subscriptions are spent or what the Institute does for the membership. The answer to both these questions can readily be found by a study of the annual report, the announcements and publications in the professional Press, and in the newsletters. In order to give a clearer picture to members, however, the form of the annual report has been changed so as to adopt a more modern layout and the annual income and expenditure has been clearly analysed under functional headings; the cost of the 1966 report in this form will not exceed the cost of the 1965 report together with the President's statement which was circulated separately. Improvements in layout will be made year by year in future. It is hoped that these changes will commend themselves to members and will enable them to appreciate the volume of work which is undertaken by the Institute's permanent staff and by the large number of members who give unselfish voluntary service to help their fellow members and the profession at large.

The total number of members who serve on the Council, the district societies, the Technical Advisory Committee and the numerous standing and other committees is over one thousand two hundred. If each of them gives no more than £200 of time at professional scale rates – a modest figure which in a large number of cases is greatly exceeded – the cost of this voluntary effort would amount to about £¼ million per annum.

Monopolies Commission

It would not be appropriate to comment on the proposed reference of the accountancy profession to the Monopolies Commission except to say that the profession is short in numbers and, in recent years, has been put under great strain as a result of a mass of turgid legislation. As far as the Institute is aware no responsible complaints have been levelled against the accountancy profession that it is in a position of monopoly or has conducted its affairs in any way except to the advantage of the public it serves. The additional burden now put upon it is ill-timed.

HENRY BENSON,
President.

April 14th, 1967.

Annual Report

Extracts from the annual report of the Council to be presented to the eighty-sixth annual meeting of the Institute on Wednesday, May 10th, at Church House, Westminster, London SW1.

The future of the profession

A SIGNIFICANT event in 1966 was the establishment of a joint steering committee composed of representatives of the Institute, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland, The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland, The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants and The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants to discuss the scope and structure of the accountancy profession in Great Britain and Ireland, its standards of education and training, the basis, nature and designation of the qualifications which it provides and other related matters.

This was the first occasion in the history of the profession when representatives of the six principal accountancy bodies in Great Britain and Ireland had met in this way.

Although it had not proved possible by the end of the year to formulate proposals in sufficient detail for consideration by the six Councils, considerable progress has been made by the joint steering committee and its working parties in exploratory work. The main subjects under discussion have been as follows:

The possibility of reducing the number of professional bodies. There are six generally recognized bodies, but there are also many others which are less well known. The concept emerging is of three enlarged Institutes – one based on England and Wales, one based on Scotland and one based on Ireland – with closer contacts among them at all levels and arrangements whereby students could be trained in a practising office, or in industry, or in the public service, as they might select.

The need to raise the entry standard to that of graduates or of school-leavers who have attained minimum university entrance requirements.

The possibility of requiring students to undertake a period of full-time study of accounting and related matters: this might be before entry into or at an early stage in articulated service.

The advisability of broadening the syllabus in which students are examined in order to cover a more detailed knowledge of industrial and public service accountancy subjects than hitherto.

The possibility, if it is thought right to raise the educational and training standards of chartered accountants, of introducing a second tier of qualified accountants who would not be 'chartered' accountants. The second tier might be expected to have lower educational and training standards but nevertheless be able to fill an important role in carrying out the more routine accountancy tasks in industry, in the public service and in practising offices. A ladder from the lower tier to that of chartered accountant would, of course, be necessary for those who have the determination and ability to climb it.

The extent to which specialization should be recognized and encouraged by way of post-qualification diplomas in, say, taxation, management information and other subjects. There is already a trend in this direction.

A plan for dual or triple membership under which a member of one or other of the three Institutes of Chartered Accountants in Great Britain and Ireland would be eligible to join, if he so wished, either or both of the other two on paying the appropriate additional annual subscription.

The scope for closer collaboration between the three Institutes of Chartered Accountants, in particular by the establishment of joint committees to consider and deal with a wider range of matters of common interest than has previously been found practicable.

Burden of work

The Council's concern at the burden placed on members by the increasing complexity of recent fiscal and other legislation was expressed in a letter from the President to the Chancellor of the Exchequer dated May 7th, 1966. The letter drew attention in particular to the division of responsibility for new fiscal measures amongst a number of Government departments and to the administrative burden placed on accountants by capital gains tax. The letter and the Chancellor's reply dated May 12th, 1966, were published and made available to members at the Institute's annual meeting. On May 31st, 1966, an exploratory meeting took place at Treasury Chambers with the Chief Secretary to the Treasury. Discussion centred on the desirability of consultation between Government departments and the accountancy profession; practical problems of administering capital gains tax; and administrative arrangements generally in financial administration. Following the meeting there were further exchanges of letters in June 1966 between the Chief Secretary to the Treasury and the President regarding a suggestion that the Institute and other accountancy bodies should set up a joint standing committee to be available for consultation with the Inland Revenue and other Government departments. The Chief Secretary indicated that, for various reasons, the Government was unable to contemplate the setting up of a consultative body of this sort. All correspondence relating to these meetings . . . appeared in Accountancy for June and August 1966 [and The Accountant, May 14th and 21st and July 16th, 1966].

Matters of national and professional concern

Committees involved

Many technical matters arose during the year affecting both the public and the profession. Advice to members, efforts to remove anomalies and inconsistencies in legislation and representations to the Government on many related matters were prepared by the Parliamentary and Law Committee, the Technical Committee and the Technical Advisory Committee. Joint approaches and consultations with other accountancy bodies were dealt with by the Accountants' Joint Parliamentary Committee and the Chartered Accountants' Joint Standing Committee.

Matters considered

The work of the above committees resulted in many suggestions and recommendations to the Government. Among the most important of these were the following:

Administrative burden of capital gains tax

August 5th, 1966: A letter containing a proposal for relieving the administrative burden of the capital gains tax was sent to the Chief Secretary to the Treasury. The Deputy Chairman and other representatives of the Board of Inland Revenue discussed the proposal with representatives of the Institute on November 1st, 1966.

Capital gains tax returns

April 25th, 1966: A letter was sent to the Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue expressing concern at the framing of the requirement in the new income tax return forms to make a return of chargeable assets acquired. On May 4th, 1966, the Inland Revenue issued a Press release clarifying this point.

Earned Income relief for retirement annuities

March 3rd, 1966: Representatives of the Board of Inland Revenue, the Institute and The Law Society discussed the question of earned income relief for retirement annuities paid to former partners on the basis of a letter from the Secretary to the Deputy Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue.

Finance Act 1965, new taxation

January 31st, 1966: A memorandum was sent to the Board of Inland Revenue on some anomalies and practical difficulties arising out of the capital gains tax and corporation tax provisions of the Finance Act 1965. Published, together with the Board's reply, in Accountancy for June 1966 [and The Accountant, May 21st, 1966].

Finance Act 1965, section 23 (3) retirement annuity relief

January 31st, 1966: Representations were made to the Board of Inland Revenue on the 'six-month' rule for Schedule D assessments. A statement on this matter appeared in Accountancy for April 1966 [and The Accountant, March 5th, 1966]. In a Press notice dated March 16th, 1966, the Board of Inland Revenue announced an extra-statutory concession to the rule. The full terms of the concession are reproduced in the Members' Handbook (section Q 10).

Finance Act 1965, section 12 (3)

February 7th, 1966: Representations by the Institute and The Law Society on the tax treatment of bona fide annuity payments (section 12 (3)) were made to the Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue. Representatives of the Board, the Institute and The Law Society met on March 3rd, 1966, to consider the above matters. Following its memorandum to the Chancellor on the Finance Bill 1966 (published in Accountancy for August 1966 [and The Accountant, July 23rd, 1966]), the Council received an assurance that the new clause later introduced into the Finance Bill 1966 had the intention and effect of removing the doubt to which it had drawn attention.

Finance Bill 1966

June 14th, 1966: A memorandum was sent to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the Finance Bill 1966 with copies to the Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue. Representatives of the Board of Inland Revenue and of the Institute discussed this memorandum at a meeting on June 27th, 1966. The memorandum was published in Accountancy for August 1966 [and The Accountant, July 23rd, 1966].

Income Tax Management Act 1964

October 11th, 1966: A letter was sent to all members drawing attention to the implications of the proposal to accelerate the agreement of assessments on business profits.

Industrial Development Bill

April 26th, 1966: A meeting which took place between representatives of the Board of Trade and the accountancy profession was followed by amendments to the Industrial Development Bill.

June 17th, 1966: A letter was sent to the President of the Board of Trade setting out the Council's comments on the Industrial Development Bill, and was published in Accountancy for August 1966.

Investment grants

March 1966 onwards: The Board of Trade started consultations with the Accountants' Joint Parliamentary Committee regarding the arrangements for making claims for investment grants.

March 30th, 1966: A statement 'Interim Council suggestions on accounting for investment grants' was approved for publication. This statement received wide Press comment and mention on its release on April 12th, 1966, and was reproduced in Accountancy for May 1966 [and The Accountant, April 9th, 1966].

Land Commission Bill

July 25th, 1966: A memorandum was sent to the Minister of Land and Natural Resources concerning the Land Commission Bill's betterment levy, with copies to the Chairman of the Board of Inland Revenue. The memorandum and the reply dated August 11th, 1966, were published in Accountancy, the former in the September issue and the latter a month later [and The Accountant, August 13th and September 10th, 1966]. On December 20th, 1966, another letter to the Minister commented further on the Bill.

Prices and Incomes standstill

October 20th, 1966: In response to numerous requests from members as to what ethical and other procedures were expected from the profession in the circumstances brought about by the Prices and Incomes Act 1966 a letter was sent to each member of the Institute in the United Kingdom.

Selective employment tax

July 1st, 1966: Two letters were sent on behalf of the accountancy bodies to the Chancellor of the Exchequer concerning the effect on the profession of the selective employment tax. The Chancellor dealt with both letters in a reply on August 12th, 1966. The correspondence was published in Accountancy for October 1966 [and The Accountant, September 3rd, 1966].

July 4th, 1966: A letter was sent to the Minister of Labour containing comments on the Selective Employment Payments Bill. The Minister's reply of August 24th, 1966, indicated that amendments to the Bill had met several of the points raised by the Council.

Taxation anomalies and difficulties

April 4th, 1966: A reply was received from the Board of Inland Revenue to correspondence in December 1965 regarding general taxation anomalies and difficulties. It was published in Accountancy for June 1966 [and The Accountant, May 21st, 1966]. On April 28th, 1966, a memorandum of comment by the Council on the Board's reply and other matters was sent to the Deputy Chairman of the Board.

Members

Membership changes

The number of members of the Institute on January 1st, 1967, was 42,457, an increase of 1,698 since January 1st, 1966.

Courses and training

Both the Institute and the district societies increased the range and number of courses for members held during the year. Instructional courses arranged by the Institute covered electronic data processing, current tax practice and management information.

In addition, the annual Summer Courses took place at Oxford in July and at Cambridge in September. In 1967 these are to be held at Christ Church, Oxford, from July 13th to 18th and at Churchill College, Cambridge, from September 20th to 24th. Addresses will be given at Oxford by the immediate Past President of The American Institute of Certified Public Accountants and the President of The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants.

In 1966, guests from overseas presented papers at the Advanced Electronic Data Processing Conference and at the Oxford Summer Course.

The increasing scale of the Institute's courses activity is illustrated in the turnover involved which now stands at over £100,000 per year; it is the Council's policy to make these courses self-supporting.

The following table indicates the attendances at courses:

	From Practice	From Industry, Commerce and others	Total
1964
Electronic Data Processing	150	135	285
Summer Courses	320	90	410
1965
Electronic Data Processing	320	315	635
Summer Courses	305	95	400
1966
Electronic Data Processing	300	245	545
Management Information	80	235	315
Current Tax Practice	355	50	405
Advanced Electronic Data Processing Conference*	45	70	115
Summer Courses	275	90	365
	2,150	1,325	3,475

* In addition forty non-members prominent in the computer field were welcomed to this conference.

Auditing courses

The Council is conscious that the pressure of work on members makes it difficult for them to keep abreast of every aspect of professional activity. The Council is concerned to raise the general standard of auditing which represents an important part of the work of many practising firms, both large and small. Auditing standards and techniques have changed a great deal in recent years; new methods are being evolved which save time and reduce the routine work but make a more penetrating study of the things that matter. The Council has decided that the best way to help members keep in touch with developments is to encourage district societies to arrange short courses on auditing and with this in view a pilot course was held in London in November 1966 and from this, synopses of lectures on four subjects and a case study are being evolved and offered to district societies. The response has been encouraging and many district societies will be including courses in auditing in their spring programme.

Certificate in Management Information

The first examination for the Certificate in Management Information took place in October 1966. Of the eighty-four candidates, thirty-three passed, fourteen were 'referred' — that is, they were required to sit one of the papers again — and thirty-seven failed.

Plans are in hand to publicize to leaders of commerce and industry the value of the Certificate as post-qualification training.

Teaching methods and the content of courses for the Certificate were discussed at a study conference held at Birmingham University in April 1966. Copies of a report on this conference are obtainable on application.

A revised edition of a booklet containing the syllabus and reading list applying to the 1967 and 1968 examinations was published in October 1966. While this did not introduce any change in the subject-matter of the previous syllabus it presented more clearly both the subjects and the scope of the four papers.

Particulars of courses in colleges of further education for the October 1966 examination were published in Accountancy for April 1966 and those for the examination to be held in 1967 and 1968 in Accountancy for September 1966. It has also been decided in principle that the examination may be available at selected overseas centres. Details of the examination centres will be published shortly.

The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland is now participating fully in the scheme for the Certificate.

Joint Diploma in Management Accounting Services

The Joint Diploma Board answered over two thousand inquiries from individual members of the participating bodies. In order to explain the scheme more fully, representatives of the Board have visited some district societies and larger industrial firms. Tuition is being provided by an increasing number of educational establishments and it is hoped that suitable courses will be available in most of the larger cities by September 1968. The Institute of Chartered Accountants in Ireland formally joined the scheme on September 16th, 1966.

The first Part I examination was held in June 1966 and the second in February 1967. About one hundred candidates have applied for the Part II examination under the transitional provisions for persons aged over 40 years: seventeen interviewing panels have been held at which candidates have been examined and it is intended in due course to publish a selection of the theses received.

Publications

In addition to technical publications several other books and booklets were published during the year. The Council is grateful to all those who took part in their preparation. A list of all publications is available on request.

The History of the Institute

This history was published in February 1966. Over two thousand six hundred copies had been sold by December 31st, 1966.

The Practice Administration series

During the year three booklets in the series were published. Work is in progress on three further booklets. By the end of the year nearly 5,000 complete sets of the original series of ten booklets had been sold together with 8,000 individual booklets.

The Corporation Tax and The Taxation of Capital Gains

In August 1966 the Council brought up to date its 1965 booklets The Corporation Tax and The Taxation of Capital Gains by publishing two supplements setting out the changes resulting from the Finance Act 1966. The supplements are now available on application. By the end of the year 15,000 copies of the supplements had been sold, together with a total of nearly 130,000 copies of the original booklets.

The Management Information series

The first four books in the Management Information series were published by the General Educational Trust of the Institute during 1966. At December 31st, 1966, nearly 4,700 complete sets of the series had been sold together with 6,000 individual copies. The remaining four books in the series will be available in 1967.

Tape or tube?

There are two types of electronic calculator.
But only one of them gives you a permanent printed record.

MONROE Electronic Printing Calculator

A Monroe electronic printing calculator gives you permanent answers on a paper tape.

Every factor of a problem is clearly shown line by line; they can be checked at any time.

You have a permanent printed record of all calculations to attach to your work for future reference. Errors in recording results are eliminated.

And a Monroe Printing Calculator is programmable. It can 'learn' the steps of complex calculations; you simply press a key, do a problem once, and the calculator will automatically perform the same mathematical function on any factors entered for as long as you like.

But don't take our word for it. Compare both kinds of electronic calculator yourself. Pin this to your letterheading for details.

Tube-Type Electronic Calculators

A tube-type calculator provides short-lived answers on an electronic screen or in lights.

Rarely can more than four factors of a problem be shown at a time.

No permanent record of any calculation is provided. There is no protection against costly errors in recording results.

No integral programming is available.

Small in size, low in price and easy to operate, the NCR 500 is a real stored-program computer which produces familiar printed records, and can grow as your business grows into a data processing system of remarkable size and power.

What makes the 500 the largest small computer in the business? Because with the NCR 500 Magnetic Record Card System, you get the speed and versatility of a real stored-program computer plus the convenience of visible records in a form familiar to you and your staff. Because it enables all kinds of business data to be processed electronically. Because you can increase its capacity at any time during its long working life with a wide choice of high speed peripheral units, including punched card or punched tape input and output and a line printer. No other small computer makes it so easy to start, or can take you so far.

With the NCR 500 you start computing for under £16,000. Your staff will find it as easy to use as an accounting machine. The NCR 500 makes nonsense of so many computer prejudices on cost, size and complexity, that every business owes it to its future efficiency to talk 500 computing with NCR today.

The Man who talked in Time

would not tolerate bad debts from a market new to them. And a lot of these enquiries were from firms unknown to Mason too.

"I'm not going to risk it," he said to his assistant when they were both at the Exhibition to see how things were going. "A few bad debts could sour the atmosphere with old J.B.—apart from anything else."

"Why don't you sell only to Shield-approved accounts?" interposed a neighbour from a nearby stand who was indulging in that well-known Exhibition custom—a rake-round the other fellow's exhibits.

"What on earth is a Shield-approved account?" asked Mason, much intrigued.

"It's one of the advantages of dealing with Shield Factors" explained the man who talked in time. "The Shield people give credit clearance—or not—regarding your new customers before you start doing business. So you are completely protected."

"That sounds as if it should delight J.B."

It did. And at first Nigel Mason little suspected how much. In addition to cutting out all possibility of bad debts, Shield Factors have saved the whole Group the cost and bother of ledger keeping, debt collection and account rendering. There is also access to immediate finance should it be needed, as well as an assured cash in-flow each month, according to each company's sales and deliveries.

"I still like my sherry out of a glass" confided old J.B. one day, "but it was a happy day for us when we got involved with plastics."

Find out more about Shield Factors and you'll agree that new ventures require new financial techniques.

DIVERSIFICATION was in the air when the fateful letter arrived. After all, the Jason Brown Group of Companies was the parent organisation behind several engineering firms, book publishers, and wine and spirit merchants—but plastics, that was something quite new.

The letter was from a comparatively young but fast-growing plastics company whose expansion was outgrowing its strength. Its Managing Director, Nigel Mason, had seen an advertisement by the "J.B. Group" inviting medium-sized companies of repute to come under "the J.B. umbrella", while retaining their own identity. So he enquired.

An Audit Approach to Computers

An Audit Approach to Computers was published by the General Educational Trust of the Institute in December 1966. By the end of the year nearly 2,500 copies had been sold. This is the first book on the subject to be published in the United Kingdom.

Newsletters

In 1966 it was decided to issue the Institute Newsletter four times a year to all members. The Council decided on this development in order to improve the flow of information to members and to help them to keep up to date with current developments.

The quarterly Education Newsletter, in a redesigned form, was issued in 1966. It is circulated free of charge to members connected with educational activities and to universities and colleges. In addition to the 2,000 copies distributed in this way, copies are available on demand.

Library

The Library moved from Moorgate Place to Eileen House, 26-34 Old Street, EC1, in September 1966. The new temporary accommodation consists of a large library room and a members' reference and reading room. The temporary inconvenience caused to members by the distance of the Library from the centre of the City is being mitigated as far as is possible by photocopying and the postal service. The new telephone number is 01-253 1090.

Institute Appointments Service

The former Appointments Register is now known as the Institute Appointments Service.

The number of members placed in employment during the year was 106 compared with 98 in 1965. There was a marked difference between the first half of 1966 and the second half. During the latter part of the year, vacancies notified fell to 345, compared with 474 in the first six months. The number of members registered increased to 357, compared with 276, with the result that at this period for the first time for many years there were more members on the Institute's books seeking appointments than there were vacancies available.

District societies*Meetings

The annual meeting between representatives of the district societies and of the Council took place on November 3rd, 1966. A range of topics was discussed and particular attention was paid to the questions of recruitment, education and training of articled clerks and to relationships with the Government.

A meeting with representatives of the Union of Chartered Accountant Students' Societies was held in March 1966 at which many items of common interest were examined.

Grants

Grants to district societies for the year 1966 totalled £50,475 compared with £44,962 in 1965.

Farm business records

In June 1966 the Council drew the attention of district societies to an announcement by the Minister of Agriculture in the House of Commons of the extension on September 1st, 1966, of the Farm Business Recording Scheme to the whole of England and Wales, and suggested that district society committees might undertake advertising in local papers to publicize the services of chartered accountants in this sphere.

Recruitment*New committee formed

The Council has appointed a Recruitment Committee to assess the probable future demand for the services of members and the recruitment policies needed to meet those demands both in practice and in industry and commerce.

The work of this committee will include an examination of the extent of the present shortage of articled clerks and whether this is likely to increase or diminish in the foreseeable future; an analysis of the causes of the shortage and whether it is more acute in some parts of the country than in others; consideration of the remuneration paid in relation to alternative occupations open to potential recruits and whether changes in recruitment policies should be made.

Advertising campaign

In addition to the normal recruiting effort during 1966, which included an increasing programme of visits to universities by the Students' Advisory Officer and the insertion of advertisements in school and university magazines, the Institute conducted an advertising campaign in several national newspapers. This campaign was also aimed at bringing to the attention of the public the scope of the services which chartered accountants can provide. A series of advertisements appeared between February and the end of July. It is too early to assess the full effect of such a campaign.

Other recruiting activities

District societies were represented at school careers conventions throughout the country, and careers books and pamphlets, together with exhibition stands, were supplied by the Institute on request. Many district societies also applied for the grants which the Institute makes available to enable them to undertake advertising in the careers supplements of local newspapers.

Articles registered in 1966

A total of 3,652 articles of clerkship were registered in 1966 compared with 3,623 in 1965.

Graduate entry

During the year 367 university graduates entered into articles, compared with 324 in the previous year.

Articled clerks – training*Full-time study courses

An experiment in the education of articled clerks began in October 1966 when four full-time pilot courses of nine months' duration began at colleges of further education.

The courses were available to articled clerks who had not less than two passes at the advanced level in the General Certificate of Education examination and had qualified for a reduction in service under articles from five to four years. Particulars were sent to all members in practice in the United Kingdom in May 1966 and a statement was published in Accountancy for September 1966. Details were also sent to more than 3,000 schools.

These courses are being attended by 126 articled clerks and are being held at:

Enfield College of Technology
Leeds College of Commerce
Liverpool College of Commerce

Changes were necessary in by-laws 67 and 88 to enable students undertaking these courses to apply for exemption from the Institute's Intermediate examination.

As a result of the experience gained in 1966 the Council has decided to extend the arrangements to eight more colleges of further education in other parts of the country. These are:

Bristol College of Commerce
City of Westminster College
Kington College of Technology
Lanchester College of Technology (Coventry)
Manchester College of Commerce
Newcastle College of Commerce
Nottingham Regional College of Technology
Portsmouth College of Technology

The Council published a statement in February 1967 giving detailed particulars of the courses which will amplify the previous release relating to the 1966-67 session. This statement is being circulated with this report to all members in practice in the United Kingdom.

Other courses for articled clerks

Apart from these full-time courses, some fifty colleges were co-operating with education sub-committees of district societies and branches in the provision of other courses to assist in the training of articled clerks. These included short introductory courses of three to four weeks' duration for articled clerks at the commencement of their service and a variety of courses designed to help articled clerks who were taking the Institute's examinations.

Training teachers in accountancy

With the implementation of the Council's proposals for full-time courses the serious shortage of accountancy teachers will become more acute. The Institute is taking steps to alleviate this problem, both by encouraging members to take up teaching and by providing courses for those already teaching.

Courses were held at Wolverhampton Technical Teachers College in July and September; the programme concentrated on the principles and methods of teaching and laid emphasis on practical problems. Each course covered a period of four days and fifty-two teachers and prospective teachers attended. Arrangements have been made for an advanced course at Wolverhampton in April 1967.

A one-day conference held at Southlands College, Wimbledon, in January 1967, was designed for members, especially those recently qualified, who wished to know more about the opportunities offered by such a career.

In order to publicize these opportunities a booklet entitled Opportunities in Teaching for Chartered Accountants has been published by the General Educational Trust of the Institute, giving details of salaries, career prospects and conditions of service in universities and colleges. Special reference to the contribution which the part-time teacher can offer is made in the booklet, which is available on request.

Legislation and the articled clerk

Several new items of legislation affected the position of articled clerks in 1966. The Institute approached the Ministry of Social Security on the status of students in relation to National Insurance and the Selective Employment Tax during periods of study leave. The Redundancy Payments Act 1965 also affected the position of articled clerks, and in October 1966 the Institute circulated a statement on the subject to all members in practice in the United Kingdom.

C.N.A.A. degrees

Degrees conferred by the Council for National Academic Awards were accepted as appropriate entry qualifications on the same basis as degrees of universities in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Examinations

The large number of articled clerks currently sitting for Institute examinations was demonstrated in May 1966 when, for the first time, 2,500 of the candidates sat for the Final examinations in the Alexandra Palace in London. Photographs of the occasion appeared in national newspapers throughout the world.

The President presented awards at prize-giving ceremonies held at the Saddlers' Hall in the City of London on March 30th and November 2nd, 1966.

Overseas relations

The increasing activity in the Institute's relations with overseas accountancy bodies is illustrated in part by the details of visits abroad and the participation in the activities of the Union Européenne des Experts Comptables Economiques et Financiers given on page [522].

In pursuance of its policy of advocating freedom for qualified accountants to practise throughout the world without artificial barriers, such as those based upon nationality or residence, the Institute has continued to make representations where the legislation of overseas countries has prevented the full exercise of the right to practise.

On his retirement from the Council of this Institute in October 1966, Sir Thomas Robson, M.B.E., M.A., F.C.A., relinquished his membership of the Executive Committee of U.E.C. as the Institute's representative. Mr S. John Pears, F.C.A., was nominated in his place and was elected to the Executive Committee by the Assembly of Delegates at its meeting at Baden-Baden on November 7th, 1966.

International study group

During the visits of the President and Secretary to the annual conference of The Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants in August 1966 and to the annual meeting of The American Institute of Certified Public Accountants in October 1966, arrangements were made to set up a study group, consisting of representatives of the Canadian Institute, the American Institute and the three chartered bodies in Great Britain and Ireland, to carry out comparative studies as to accounting thought and practice in the participating countries. The study group's first meeting took place in New York in February 1967.

Public relations

Besides matters already mentioned elsewhere in this report such as advertising and the Institute Newsletter, relationships with the Press and other media have been widened. As a result of this work the Institute's activities have been more frequently publicized in the Press and on television than hitherto.

Moorgate Place redevelopment

The application for planning permission submitted to the Corporation of the City of London was approved on May 19th, 1966. An application was then submitted to the Ministry of Transport for the closure of certain alleyways in the area and for the substitution of a new pedestrian way under the Institute's new building between Langthorn Court and Great Swan Alley. Permission was granted to take effect from November 25th, 1966.

The contract for the demolition of the buildings on that part of the site on which the new building is to be erected was awarded to Frank Valori Ltd and demolition work has been completed. Seven firms responded to the Council's invitation to tender for the construction of the new building. The contract was awarded to Holland & Hannen and Cubitts (Southern) Ltd on November 14th, 1966, and work started immediately. The terms of the contract require that the building shall be completed by June 13th, 1969.

CAESS – a 10 per cent bonus

The 10 per cent bonus declared on pensions purchased up to May 31st, 1966, brings the Chartered Accountants Employees Superannuation Scheme into the front rank of pension schemes for staff. The declaration of the bonus followed an actuarial valuation and the Council has been advised that, if bonuses of even half this amount are declared on future valuations, the scheme will compare favourably with all others available.

CARBS – improved terms

Members were advised in October 1966 of improved terms effective from July 1st, 1966, for Section A of the Chartered Accountants Retirement Benefits Scheme (which is applicable to self-employed members). These terms are materially better than those previously in force. They are subject to review on June 30th, 1967.

Auditors

The auditors, Mr Bernard William Rivett, F.C.A., and Mr James Mansfield Keith, F.C.A., retire under by-law 118 and are eligible for reappointment.

Appreciation

The Council wishes to record its appreciation of the services rendered by members of the Institute who have been co-opted as members of its committees and sub-committees and to those who have served on the Technical Advisory Committee. The Council also records its appreciation of the work of the district societies and branches, and to those who have assisted on courses, examinations and other activities on behalf of the Institute.

Friendly societies and industrial and provident societies

Following discussions with the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies a letter was sent in April 1966 on behalf of the Institute, the Scottish Institute, the Irish Institute and the Association commenting on a scheme to revise the law regarding the accounts and audit of friendly societies and similar bodies. A meeting with the Chief Registrar and representatives of his department and of the Treasury followed on June 14th, 1966. As no date could be set for the introduction of amending legislation, the accountancy bodies asked for reasonable increases in the meantime in the existing scale of fees for approved auditors, which dates back to 1961. At the request of the Chief Registrar, the accountancy bodies undertook to collect from their members examples of the costs of auditing friendly society audits in 1961 for comparison with current costs.

The universities and the accountancy profession

Joint Standing Committee's booklet. Details of the degree courses approved by the Council under by-law 68 are given in the booklet The Universities and the Accountancy Profession issued by the Joint Standing Committee. The current edition covers the university session October 1967 to July 1968 and may be obtained on application.

Research

Eight research projects are being sponsored by the Institute's Research Committee at universities. Details of these projects were published in Accountancy for October 1966. It is expected that they will be completed, and some resulting research papers published, in 1967. District societies have been asked for suggestions on further subjects for research.

ANNUAL ACCOUNTS

Changes have been made in the form of the Institute's accounts to make them more informative. The Revenue Account, page [525], shows all expenditure and related income allocated to main functions and a supporting analysis is given in a schedule on pages [526 and 527].

The Council has decided that all loan interest shall be charged to Revenue Account while the Moorgate Place building programme proceeds and, after charging loan interest, there is a revenue surplus for 1966 of £77,710 (1965: £87,605). The significant differences between the 1966 and 1965 Revenue Accounts are:

- The revised subscription and admission fee rates increased income from members by £122,652;
- The net cost of technical activities, which had been unusually low in 1965 because of the very satisfactory sales of tax booklets, increased by £57,895;
- The 1966 national advertising campaign cost £31,916;
- Commitment commission of £10,000 (a non-recurring item) was paid in 1966 in connection with the borrowing arrangements.

Terminology in Financial Analysis

FINANCIAL analysis can be of great use in management and investment decision taking, but this use will only attain its real value if there is some uniformity in the methods and the terms employed. At the present time, when we are coming to the end of the transition from the income and profits tax system to the corporation tax system it is opportune to give some thought to the problem. The difference in the method of taxation has already caused a number of changes in expressing financial measurements, and this should be reinforced by a further appraisal of the purposes for which particular analytical techniques are used and the way in which the results of that analysis are expressed.

Purpose of financial analysis

The financial analysis of a company's accounts is designed to measure two fundamental facts about the company – (a) the level of profitability and the factors which influence that profitability, and (b) the liquidity. Profitability is the relationship between profits and the capital employed in the business. This relationship can be broken down step-by-step to the underlying factors which affect the level of profitability. Here it is essential that the conception of the factors to be used at each stage should be the same if the measurements are to have any validity.

Liquidity deals with the relationship between short-term assets and short-term liabilities, and is significant in attempting to estimate the ability of the company to meet its immediate commitments.

Profitability

Measurements of profitability are used in a number of different contexts, e.g. in interfirm comparisons, for assessing the comparative profitability of different businesses; by issuing houses, in helping to determine the price that should be set for a new issue of shares; by financial journalists, in commenting upon company results; by management, in assessing the profitability of a company as a whole and its various subdivisions.

Yet the basis on which the measurement is made can vary widely. How often does one read, for example, that the return on capital employed for a company is X per cent without any indication as to whether the profits figures used for the purposes of the measurement are before or after tax and interest? Or whether the 'capital employed' is a measurement of gross assets, net assets, or shareholders' funds? There is a great need for some uniformity in composition and definition of the factors used in the measuring process.

Basically profitability is the relationship between the level of profits and the capital employed in the business. As such, it is the prime measurement of the profitability of any business enterprise and an indication of the overall efficiency of its management. It reflects in financial terms the results of every decision that has been taken in the past at all levels of management within the business.

The highest level of business reporting is that of the board of directors to the owners of the company. Here the board is justifying to the shareholders the use that it has made of their funds during the past accounting period. At the same time the company has to justify itself to those who have lent money to the company, relating to the return on, and the security of, those funds. Each of the groups of people providing funds for the company – whether shareholders or debenture-holders – anticipate a return on those funds in the form of either dividend or interest.

This gives a useful concept of the term 'capital employed'. The funds mentioned above can all be treated on the same basis, irrespective of source, since they are all used by the company on a long-term basis, and on which the company must provide a return if it is to progress. This would exclude from the measurement, those short-term liabilities, on which the company does not have to provide a return and which can be taken in an assessment of the effectiveness with which management plans and utilizes the net working capital of the business.

On this basis, the definition of 'capital employed' would be the total long-term funds employed in the business, or the total net assets of the business, the two figures being the same.

Given this definition of capital employed, how is the profit factor to be measured? Under the old system of income tax and profits tax on companies there was a great deal of logic in measuring this before tax. Now, however, there is a tax on the company, as such, which is unaffected by considerations of the tax position of individual shareholders. It would seem logical, therefore, to assess the profit factor on the net amount accruing to the business after all liabilities, including tax, have been met. It is only out of this net amount that the company can pay dividends and provide for future expansion through retentions. Profits are of no use to the company if they are largely absorbed by taxation; the significant figure is the amount left after deduction of tax.

As in the definition of capital employed, we have included all long-term funds (including borrowed funds), so in profit measurement we should use the figure of after-tax profits, before interest on long-term funds. The interest on borrowed money must form part of its return from the point of view of the company.

Relationship between return on capital employed and other measurements

The concept of return on capital employed as being the after-tax profits, before interest, as a percentage of the long-term funds employed in the business, provides a basis for linking this measurement with other measurements used, both internally by management and externally by analysts of one sort or another.

Internally, discounted cash flow, when used, measures the after-tax, before interest, return on the commitment of the company's long-term funds to a particular investment; and in essence the return on capital employed is a summary of the actual discounted cash flow returns that have been achieved on all past investments still in existence. Here there is, in fact, a common language and a common basis.

Company earnings, price earnings ratios, etc., are now commonly based on after-tax earnings, as should be the return on the equity funds in the business. However, when one examines the return on equity for a company, it can be seen that this return is determined by two basic factors – (a) the return on capital employed, and (b) the degree of gearing in the capital structure. Both of these factors can be directly related when the return on capital employed and the return on equity are both expressed in after-tax terms.

Given a common basis for measuring profitability, the subsidiary ratios which lead up to this overall measurement follow in a logical pattern. The profits-to-sales ratio will be again on an after-tax basis and the capital employed factor in the turnover to capital employed ratio will employ the same definition used above. The multiple of these two ratios will then give the return on capital employed figure. The further subdivision of these major elements will then continue on a basis suitable to the individual business or industry.

Liquidity

This is an area of financial analysis where the terms used follow a fairly uniform practice. The ratios commonly used being the current ratio and the quick, or acid test, ratio. One element that may need further consideration is the question of bank borrowing. Although bank borrowing by the company is technically a short-term liability, in practice a number of companies use bank borrowing as a permanent source of funds. In such a case there is a great deal of merit in considering the borrowing as a part of the capital employed rather than taking it into account in the liquidity ratios.

Owen Owen

FOR clarity and style of presentation the accounts of Owen Owen Ltd, from which this week's reprint is taken, are in the top bracket. The accounts open with a clear, columnar profit and loss account, with the notes facing on the right. Group and parent balance sheets – also in columnar form – follow, and are placed to the right of a single narrative which, with the group figures, occupies the left-hand side of an extended double opening. The parent figures are to the left of the opening and the extension provides space for the balance sheet notes, which are also well and clearly presented. Reading the balance sheets and notes involves a minimum of leaf-turning. Group comparative figures are included in the reprint.

Inside the back cover is the detail of the companies in the Owen Owen Group which, based on Liverpool, is a department store business with branches in Coventry, Southampton, Preston, Doncaster, Chester, Blackpool and Birkenhead. There is a subsidiary in Canada, a contract furnishing subsidiary and another subsidiary operating as export agents.

Revaluation

All United Kingdom properties were revalued on a going concern basis as at February 1st, 1966, with the exception of three secondary properties which are to be acquired by local authorities and which have been valued by the directors. Equipment and vehicles in the United Kingdom were valued by the company's officials having regard to age and cost of replacement at the same date.

On this basis, the fixed assets amounted in total to £8,103,186, giving a surplus of £3,116,046 credited to capital reserve. The chairman explains that some £2 million of this surplus was revealed in 1961 (and has been noted on succeeding balance sheets) as a result of a valuation undertaken as part of the debenture financing in that year. Only the Canadian assets are now recorded at their historical cost.

Profits of the year under review have felt the full impact of the revaluation by being charged both with depreciation on the basis of the 1966 gross book values, and supplementary depreciation on the difference between gross book value and the estimated replacement cost of each class of asset.

Supplementary depreciation of £27,000 has been charged in Canada for the first time. Thus the available profit of the group at £333,000 – some £33,000 less than the previous year – has carried an increased depreciation charge of about £56,000.

Present day

In confirming their depreciation policy in the context of the revaluation, the directors have reviewed the life given to each class of asset and some adjustments have been made. The only one of real significance concerns buildings, which will in future be given a life of sixty years instead of the previous fifty, or the balance of the leases if they have less than sixty years to run.

'The company's earnings', comments Mr John A. H. Norman, the chairman, 'are therefore based on present-day valuations of fixed assets, although depreciation in excess of what is charged on historical cost is disallowed for tax purposes. Indeed, we carry a further tax penalty because no tax allowances whatsoever are given on retail buildings'.

To bring out the 'quality' of earnings, a change has been made in the way depreciation is shown in the accounts this year. For the first time, the supplementary charge is deducted from the profit after taxation and carried to the balance sheet as an addition to general capital reserves instead of to a specific fixed asset replacement reserve, as previously.

The £714,747 of first mortgage debenture stock was repaid last January and was replaced by raising £1 million of a new long-dated stock. In the interim, Midland Bank provided bridging finance which more than accounts for the overdraft at the balance sheet date.

Computer-working

The accounts, the chairman remarks, have been drawn up to comply with the Stock Exchange requirements in order to obtain a quotation for the new debenture stock. Additional information has been given for the first time – particularly the shareholding details.

The style of the presentation has also been entirely changed from last year, and changed very much for the better, even though in the previous form the standard was relatively high. The company has changed over to computer-working, a Honeywell 200 computer going into service in April last year in place of the previous punched-card installation. The changeover process was aggravated because the computer had to be located at the company's new administration centre at Bootle in view of the pending compulsory acquisition of the head office building in the centre of Liverpool.

For the current year, wages payroll and credit control are to be put on the computer in addition to present accounts and statistical work. Various pilot schemes to assist in merchandise stock control are to be expanded.

All told, the Owen Owen report and accounts give the impression of a decidedly lively and efficient organization.

But what is The Times Business News?

The Times Business News is a complete business newspaper carried in The Times itself. It covers industry, technology, commerce and finance on a world-wide scale and in depth. It places special emphasis on industry and technology. It appeared for the first time on April 11. Perhaps you've read it? If you haven't, there are any number of reasons why you should.

LOS ANGELES/ TEXAS/CHICAGO/NY

New York alone is not America, and so the TBN has correspondents on the spot in the industrial complexes on the West Coast, in Texas, in Chicago, in Canada and in the Buffalo/Rochester/NY State areas as well in Wall Street.

TOKYO/THE RUHR/ WESTMINSTER

Tony Vice, Business Editor

And since the strategies and tactics of governments are significant to business, the TBN holds a watching brief for its readers in this area too. For that purpose it enjoys not only its own resources but also those of The Times newspaper itself.

HULL/TYNESIDE/ THE RHONDDA/ BIRMINGHAM

Nor does the TBN miss the fact that the business of Britain is not carried on exclusively in Throgmorton and Threadneedle Streets.

The TBN follows events all over the U.K. wherever things are happening which can affect the plans, careers and intentions of management, workers, technologists and investors in Britain.

MADISON AVENUE/ MAYFAIR/HOLBORN

The TBN also concerns itself with the industries behind industry: marketing and advertising. It carries client, agency and service company news and, once more, the news is international and treated in depth.

MACHINE OIL AS WELL AS TICKERTAPE INK

Business today is not an academic matter of closing prices on tickertape and unexpected rallies in the pound.

It is a question of which companies are building plant, where and why they are doing it and if they are likely to achieve their targets; of new processes or methods or equipment which can throw the plans of people who don't know about them completely out of kilter; of forays, reconnaisances and full scale invasions from abroad (from Europe as well as the U.S.A.) into British industry and into the British high street.

Peter Jay, Economic Correspondent

It is concerned with what is tediously and continuously called 'the brain drain' but which is really a multi-directional shift and exchange of brain and manpower within and without Britain.

So The Times Business News, complete as its financial information is, has more than tickertape ink in it, it also has machine oil, midnight oil and brickdust.

In short, The Times Business News misses nothing, and what it does not miss neither does it misinterpret.

WHO ARE YOU IF YOU READ THE TIMES BUSINESS NEWS?

You are whoever and whatever you are: a newspaper does not define its readers; it is defined by them and what they want from it.

You may be a tycoon, or an assistant executive of some kind or another; you may be an entrepreneur, an investor, an engineer, a technologist, an applied scientist or a student; you may be a supermarketeer or a shopkeeper aware of the presence of supermarkets around him. You may be an office boy.

WHERE DOES THE TIMES BUSINESS NEWS LEAVE THE TIMES NEWSPAPER ITSELF?

It leaves it precisely where it was this morning, in the forefront of the news on Fleet Street as the most changed and developing newspaper you can pick off a newsstand.

The TBN simply complements a newspaper which already covers home and overseas news with substance and insight, that offers the refreshment of daily pages on the arts and entertainment, that expects women to be woman enough to read the daily women's page but man enough to read the rest of the newspaper too, that covers sport as accurately as it does politics and the law, whose correspondence columns are a debating ground and often a battlefield for the authoritative and the contentious on important subjects every day.

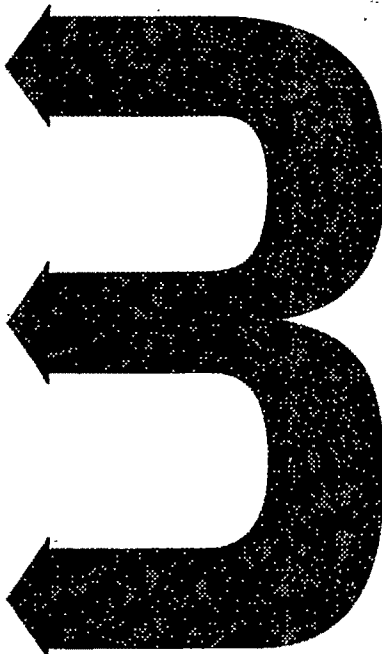

The Times is already the daily newspaper for every man who requires journalism to be both serious and readable.

CITY NOTES

THE help the stock-markets failed to get from a stand-still Budget they have attempted to find in the Greater London Council and County Council election results. The Budget delayed the beginnings of reflation, but the election results may induce the Government to take action politically that the Chancellor was not prepared to take economically.

Whether, in fact, that will prove so is yet to be seen, and the present impression is that the Government seems more likely to dig in its collective heels and attempt to prove that its economic policy is right. If that is so, then equities at their present price levels would appear to be discounting reflationary prospects some considerable way ahead.

Before the Budget, it was considered that new equity buyers had to be prepared to take a six months' view. The Budget must have lengthened that view, probably by another six months at least.

A firm gilt-edged market, however, should at least put some kind of a peg into equities. The popular forecast of a cut in Bank rate to  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent soon and to 5 per cent before the end of the year still holds good even though it is appreciated that Bank rate will follow the international interest rate trend rather than set it. The fixed interest end of the market will attract support institutionally for some time yet.

THE lifting of the ceiling on the level of bank advances is, for the present at least, very much an academic exercise. The banks, despite the seasonal upturn in lending for tax covering reasons, have been making heavy weather of getting their lending level even near the original ceiling. Availability of bank credit does not of itself mean a demand for credit. Confidence to borrow creates demand, and confidence has hardly been increased as a result of the Budget.

The Bank of England has, in its latest directive to the banks, re-emphasized the need for correct lending priorities — export finance being at the top of the list — and has implied that special deposits will be used as the correcting influence should the level of bank lending appear to be getting out of hand. Hitherto, special deposits have only been used in sterling crisis periods as a restriction enforcement; but more flexible use of the system seems to be in prospect.

THE bad results from British Motor Holdings — a half-year loss of £7.5 million — have inevitably renewed suggestions of a link between this group and Leyland, whose heavy commercial vehicle and bus interests are allied to the Triumph and Rover car subsidiaries. A Leyland-B.M.H. merger would make economic sense in an industry competitively powered abroad by groups of vast size. No doubt the Monopolies Commission would want to have its say in any suggested Leyland-B.M.H. link but it is broadly agreed in the City, and in the motor industry, that the link is something that the two companies should seriously consider.

THE building societies are beginning to find that  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent tax paid interest to investors is losing its pulling power. The net inflow of funds in the first quarter of this year was slightly below the corresponding 1965 level.

The Building Societies Association's view is that if the building society movement is to continue to provide the necessary finance for the private sector of the house building industry, then it will have to maintain its present interest rate structure. It is admitted that should Bank rate come down to  $5\frac{1}{2}$  per cent quickly, building societies will be under pressure to reduce their rates, but the impression is that they are not prepared to jeopardize their position by too early a cut. Such a move would almost inevitably lead to mortgage rationing. As things are now, conditions are not quite as free as they were earlier in the year.

London and District Society of Chartered Accountants

Annual Report and Chairman's Statement

THE annual report of the London and District Society of Chartered Accountants for the year ended March 31st, 1967, shows that membership of the Society rose by 464 during the year to a total of 10,779. The report puts on record the large number of meetings, residential courses and social events held during 1966-67, and also contains the statement of the Chairman of the Society, Mr Brian A. Maynard, M.A., F.C.A., on the year's activities.

The report will be presented to the Society's twenty-fifth annual meeting to be held on Thursday, May 11th, at 6 p.m., at the Little Ship Club, Bell Wharf Lane, Upper Thames Street, London EC4.

CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT

In the course of his statement, Mr Maynard said: I am very conscious of the fact that the ambitious nature of this year's programme has thrown heavy burdens on many members of the Committee and also on the officers of the branch and groups. On behalf of the growing body of members who have been participating in our activities, I would therefore like to thank them, together with our speakers and lecturers, for the generous way in which they have devoted so much time, energy and leisure for the benefit of the profession generally and of London members in particular.

No less than three major residential conferences were held during this year. The 'Taxation' conference followed fairly traditional lines and was as popular and successful as ever. The 'Auditing' conference was something of a landmark as it was the first residential conference devoted exclusively to this subject to be held in this country.

The membership and resources of the Society are now so large that it is proper for it to do a certain amount of pioneering on its own account. Indeed, it may be more convenient for members' reactions to certain types of innovations to be obtained at this level, rather than by the Institute itself. This philosophy prompted us to arrange the residential conference on 'Operational Research'.

Two-day non-residential courses

The experiments of holding two-day Saturday courses on 'Auditing' and on 'Taxation - capital gains tax and corporation tax' were so successful that each had to be repeated. Clearly there is a substantial demand for worthwhile courses held outside office hours and this will be taken into account when planning next year's programme.

We have for some time felt that a district as large as London should be able to develop some course material that is also helpful to other district societies. Those members who gave so much time to setting up the two-day Taxation course are the first to have this satisfaction. The documentation of this course has been given to the Institute as a package and we have offered to run a special pilot course for the benefit of representatives of other district societies who are interested in mounting similar courses.

Evening meetings

Perhaps the most interesting feature this year was the size of attendance at the last three meetings which were devoted to 'Mathematical models and their accountancy implications' and 'Expenditure on new projects and plant replacement: the correct assessment of profitability and risk'. This indicated a considerable demand for technical papers of this nature given by recognized authorities - primarily among members who had not previously played much part in the Society's activities.

The last two lectures were over-subscribed while the lecture on 'Income tax and company distributions' was so heavily over-subscribed that it had to be repeated. It will, therefore, be necessary in future to choose larger premises for lectures that are likely to have a wide appeal. Otherwise, the informal atmosphere at the Little Ship Club seems to have been popular enough with members, as about two-thirds of those attending the evening meetings have been electing to pay the additional 7s 6d to stay on for discussion over beer and sandwiches in the club's bar and library.

Two joint meetings were held, the first with the Royal Institution of Chartered Surveyors and the second with the Holborn Law Society. In view of the obvious interest in meetings with our brothers in other professions, it looks as if such occasions will now find a regular place in our programmes.

Luncheons

The record attendances at our series of luncheons were a well deserved compliment to our distinguished speakers. They also showed the potential support for occasions of this nature, which will encourage the Committee to continue to invite outstanding personalities.

Branches and groups

The formation of a new branch, the South Essex Society, which hopes to hold its first meeting on April 24th, 1967, is an encouraging indication of the vitality of the Mid-Essex, South-west Essex and Southend-on-Sea groups.

The general level of activity has been high and, further new groups were formed during the year. The increase has been primarily among the specialist groups, no less than seven new taxation groups having been established.

London Students' Society

Many members have, I am sure, become convinced of the unrealistic gap between our articled clerks, of whom there are no less than nearly nine thousand in the district's area, and the Society itself. There is clearly more to be done to make them feel that they belong to the profession, albeit in a junior capacity, from the moment that their service under articles begins, and that the Society takes an interest in their welfare. We have, therefore, set up a special Student's Society Liaison Sub-committee, composed primarily of younger members of this Committee, to explore possibilities of closer liaison with the Students' Societies.

I am glad to say that this approach has met with an enthusiastic reception from the President and other officials of the Students' Society and a number of constructive proposals which we hope will appeal to articled clerks who are nearing the end of their articles are currently under consideration. While it would be wrong to exaggerate the rate of progress, there is no doubt that the initial steps are very much in the right direction. They include the election of two representatives of your Committee to the Students' Society Committee, and the proposal, which necessitates a special resolution which we hope will have your support, that the chairman of the Students' Society should become an ex officio member of this Committee.

The future

As Chairman of the Society one cannot fail to be aware of two conflicting factors: firstly, the need to provide further facilities for members based on certain parts of our large area where a greater level of activity is desirable; secondly, the fact that one cannot reasonably expect the average member of this Committee to devote a significantly greater amount of his time to its affairs. It is, therefore, beginning to appear as if the only means of providing a better coverage of some of the outlying parts of the main London area, both in terms of additional local activities and of developing contacts with outside bodies, such as schools and technical colleges, will be to establish two or three further substantial branches under the aegis of the London District Society. If, as I sincerely hope will be the case, the discussions on 'The future of the profession' lead to progress in the not too distant future, developments along these lines could become a matter of urgency. In the meantime the Committee is giving active consideration to this problem.

Financial Assistance for Articled Clerks

Grants from Public Funds

The following statement on financial assistance which is available to articled clerks from public funds has been issued by The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales.

1. General

Local education authorities have discretionary power to award grants to students following full-time and part-time courses of study. Articled clerks of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales fall within this category. The policy of education authorities is not uniform; it is emphasized that the award of a grant is within the discretion of the authority. Any inquiry for a grant must be made direct to the local education authority concerned.

Of special importance is the requirement of some authorities that an application for a grant must be made before any course of study is commenced; in some cases retrospective grants will not be given.

In the case of the courses referred to in paragraphs 2 and 3 below, many authorities require an application for a grant for a course commencing in September/October to be made by the preceding April.

2. Full-time courses of nine months' duration (two 'A' levels)

All local education authorities have indicated that they are willing to consider grants for these courses. Many authorities will make 'major' awards, i.e. on the same basis as those made to university students, up to a maximum of £340 per annum. Other authorities are willing to make grants on a lower scale (variously called 'further education' or 'senior' or 'intermediate' awards). The value of these grants varies but is generally £40-£100 less than a major award. Maximum rates for students living at home are about £70 to £100 lower than those for students living in a hall of residence or approved lodgings. In all cases the grants are subject to reduction according to the income of the student and, if under 25 years of age, to the income of his parents. Any income which the student himself has in excess of £100 is deducted in whole from his grant. In many cases the minimum grant of £50 payable to university undergraduates (and others on 'designated' courses) irrespective of income does not apply to these courses.

Special conditions usually apply to students not normally resident in the United Kingdom. For example, a student admitted to a designated course is required ordinarily to have resided in the United Kingdom for three years prior to the commencement of the year in which the course is due to begin, except in the case of a student who would have been so resident had he or his parents (or one of them) not been employed for the time being outside the United Kingdom.

3. Special course for graduates in the academic session 1967-68 (City of London College)

All local education authorities, with the exception of those referred to below, have indicated that they are prepared to consider grants at major or lower levels. Many education authorities have stated that in making grants for this course for graduates, no regard will be paid to remuneration paid to the articulated clerk during periods when he is engaged on his principal's business; any grant however, may be affected if he receives remuneration during his periods of the course. Some authorities will consider an application only if the special course represents a normal and natural follow-on or progression from the degree course; exceptionally the class of degree may be taken into account.

Harlow	Newcastle upon Tyne

(Some of the above authorities which are not prepared to give assistance in respect of this special course have nevertheless stated that they are willing to consider grants to graduates for later courses directed to the Final examination. See also paragraph 4 below.)

4. Short courses and correspondence courses

The following local education authorities have stated that they are prepared to consider awards under this heading. In the majority of cases there are limiting conditions, particularly in the case of assistance for correspondence tuition. Some examples of these conditions are:

- (i) Remuneration of articulated clerk; in some cases regard is also paid to parental income.
- (ii) Only if there is no course available at a local College of Further Education.

- (iii) The articulated clerk is unable to follow a course with a local College of Further Education because of the nature of his duties which may not permit regular attendance (in which case a certificate from the principal may be required).
- (iv) Grant will cover part only of reimbursement of travelling expenses.
- (v) Full-time courses of less than four weeks' duration may not qualify for award of a grant.
- (vi) Grant will cover part only of any course or may be limited to part reimbursement of travelling expenses.

5. It is hoped to keep this information up to date by periodic revision. Any articulated clerk may apply to his local education authority for any of the awards referred to in this statement. Where an articulated clerk obtains an award which indicates the exercise of discretion by a local education authority in terms at variance with the information stated or implied in this statement he is invited to notify the Institute for the next issue.

6. Other sources of money

Possible sources of money to supplement grants from public funds are listed in:

Trusts and Foundations, compiled by Guy W. Keeling, B.A. (published by Bowes & Bowes, of Trinity Street, Cambridge). This book is available in reference libraries.

Educational Charities, price 2s, from The National Union of Students, 3 Endsleigh Street, London WC1, includes sections on local charities.

The Annual Charities Register and Digest can be seen in most public libraries. This gives brief outlines of charities of all kinds and includes a general educational section.

'Talks', Proposals Later this Year?

President's Remarks at East Anglian Dinner

Giving a thumbnail review of the past year's events of the English Institute, Sir Henry Benson, the President, said last week, 'We have spent a great deal of time in recent years looking at the training and education of students, but the time is now ripe to see how we can give greater help to the qualified member'. He was speaking at the annual dinner of the East Anglian Society of Chartered Accountants held at Trinity College, Cambridge.

The first important event was a significant advance in the discussions with the other recognized accountancy bodies on the possibility of integration and other changes principally in the field of education and training for the profession. Provided the Council was satisfied, after consultation with the district societies, that a workable scheme could be devised, Sir Henry hoped that proposals would be submitted for a decision of the membership as a whole towards the end of this year or early in 1968.

Three new committees

Sir Henry said that the first of three important new committees set up during the year was a Recruitment Committee aimed at examining the whole problem of recruitment to the profession, not only in the short term, but for the next twenty years or beyond.

The terms of reference include conditions of service, salaries and related matters. In the meanwhile our endeavours to attract school-leavers with two 'A' levels continued; last year nearly half our entrants measured up to this standard. We hope to do better in 1967.

Another new committee was the Post-qualification Training and Specialization Committee which, he said, would examine the need for specialization and whether or not it was appropriate to grant post-qualification diplomas or certificates to those who had acquired the necessary technical skill and practical experience in certain subjects.

The third committee was the Professional Standards Committee which had been set up to improve professional standards of performance. This committee's purpose was to help members; it would have no disciplinary powers.

'It will point out to members and ask for their comments on apparent departures from best practice, and it will be available to advise members who are faced with problems of professional standards,' he said.

Sir Henry went on to say that during the year the Council decided to give special attention to auditing. In recent years improved techniques in auditing had enabled the work to be more penetrating in character and of more constructive help to management.

'A pilot course for potential lecturers was held in London and the Institute is building up a panel of members who, with material provided by the Institute, will be willing to help district societies in mounting courses on this subject,' he said.

The committees of the Council had done a great deal of work, said Sir Henry, in making submissions to the Board of Trade on matters concerned with the Government's introduction of the new Companies Bill.

'The work in this connection was significant because the memorandum submitted to the Board of Trade was a joint memorandum prepared by our Institute, The Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland and The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants. This is the first time that a joint memorandum of the three bodies has been submitted in this way.

'In addition, the Institute has submitted a large number of papers to the Government in connection with taxation, the Industrial Development Bill, the Land Commission Bill, selective employment tax and other legislation. This work is exceedingly complex and often has to be completed against pressure of time,' he said.

Sir Henry said that work on the Institute's new building began in November 1966 and under the terms of the contract it should be completed by June 1969. All being well, therefore, the Institute could expect to occupy it either late in 1969 or early in 1970.

During the year Sir Henry had paid visits as a representative of the Institute to Canada, the United States, Malaysia, Singapore, Australia and New Zealand. He had also spent a week in Baden-Baden in connection with the affairs of the U.E.C. He hoped these visits had cemented good relations overseas; they were certainly noticeable for the prestige in which the Institute were held abroad.

Routine work

Apart from these special activities, the huge volume of routine work regularly undertaken by the Institute had continued unabated. Courses had been held by the Institute and in the districts for the benefit of many hundreds of members. Papers on technical matters and textbooks, including a history on the Institute, had been issued; the first five books in the Management Information Series were published; the Institute's advertising campaign continued, from which it had been possible to trace positive and encouraging results.

'The year has been full of activity and promise for the future,' concluded Sir Henry. 'If we maintain the present momentum we can rest assured that our Institute will continue to hold its place in the accountancy profession of the world.'

Time-wasting

Mr Eldon W. Griffiths, Conservative M.P. for Bury St Edmunds, proposing the toast to 'The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales', said the new tax system introduced by the Government had become a complex and time-wasting business.

'If I were an accountant I would regard the Chancellor of the Exchequer as one of my best friends - for he has made you more necessary than ever before!'

The toast of 'The Guests', was proposed by Mr J. C. Thornley, F.C.A., Vice-President of the Society, and Mr David Alston replied.

QUOTED SHARES

Valuation for Inland Revenue Purposes

In the past it has been the normal practice of the Board of Inland Revenue, when valuing shares and securities quoted on the London Stock Exchange for the purposes of stamp duty or of income tax under Case VII of Schedule D (short-term gains), to take the average of the two quotations in the Stock Exchange Official Daily List. The value for capital gains tax purposes, determined in accordance with the provisions of the Finance Act 1965, is usually slightly lower.

In order to obtain a common valuation for all Inland Revenue purposes, and to reduce the work of practitioners, the Board will in future adopt the capital gains tax basis for the valuation of quoted shares and securities for the purposes of stamp duty and of income tax under Case VII of Schedule D.

MANCHESTER CHARTERED ACCOUNTANT STUDENTS' SOCIETY

At a lecture given on Friday of last week to members of the Manchester Chartered Accountants' Students' Society, Mr Joel Barnett, J.P., M.P., F.A.C.C.A., Vice-Chairman of the Government Finance Committee, spoke of the drag on the economy which the present and recent past balance of payments made.

He could see little justification, he said, in saving the £ by policies which brought on a high level of unemployment and a poor rate of growth, and he said he would rather see a change in the exchange rate than such a state of affairs.

Emphasizing that the United Kingdom's problem lay not in its solvency but in its liquidity, Mr Barnett forecast a diminution in the importance of the Budget, but not its total disappearance.

ANNOTATED TAX CASES

ACCOUNTANCY AS A CAREER

The Hull, East Yorkshire and Lincolnshire Society of Chartered Accountants held a cocktail party last month for headmasters and careers masters, and representatives from Hull University and the Youth Employment Service in Hull and the East Riding of Yorkshire.

The opportunities offered by a career in accountancy were outlined to the guests and five members of the Society made up a panel to answer questions on the training of young people wanting to enter the profession. Mr R. M. Strachan, F.C.A., acted as the panel leader, the four other members being Messrs R. G. Slack, M.A., F.C.A., H. C. Shaw, F.C.A., R. G. King, F.C.A., and I. R. Bryce, A.C.A.

The meeting, which was also attended by Mr Norman Townend, F.C.A., President of the Society, proved most successful and the guests found it helpful to discuss matters relating to prospects and training requirements for a career as a chartered accountant.

LONDON ACCOUNTANTS' FOOTBALL LEAGUE

Shipley F.C. win Cup

The Cyril H. Temple Cup – the London Accountants' Football League Challenge Cup – has been won by the Shipley F.C. (Shipley, Blackburn, Sutton & Co), who beat Pridie F.C. (Pridie, Browner & Gold), 5-1.

On Tuesday, April 4th, at the Private Banks' Sports Ground, Catford Bridge, a crowd of more than three hundred from most of the member firms of the league saw a most exciting game, for despite the final score the game was not a runaway victory for the winners. At half-time Shipley led by three goals to nil but shortly after the restart Pridie came back into the game with a good goal and continued to threaten the lead of their opponents with near misses and rebounds off the post. Then, alas, an ankle injury to a Pridie forward upset the balance of the game and Shipley pressed home their advantage and scored two further goals.

The trophy was presented to the winning team's captain by the League President – Mr J. T. Patterson, F.C.A., senior partner in Temple, Gothard & Co – who briefly sketched the history of the league and the cup, adding the good wishes of Mrs D. H. Temple, who donated the cup in memory of her late husband, Mr Cyril H. Temple, former senior partner of Temple, Gothard & Co.

The ball was presented to the losing team and tankards to the referee, Mr B. Stallard (of Herts F.A. and Essex C.F.A.), and the linesmen, Mr R. Jack and Mr A. Goodwin (Middlesex F.A. and Kent C.F.A. respectively).

In a witty response to the President's congratulations, Mr E. F. Weston, F.C.A., senior partner of Shipley, Blackburn, Sutton & Co, spoke of his pleasure in taking into his care a fine piece of silver on the occasion of his silver wedding anniversary – a disclosure that brought forth a well-merited burst of applause from the packed audience. Tea was followed by an enjoyable informal dance which provided entertainment for the rest of the evening.

The League Championship has now been decided and Crest House (Deloitte, Plender, Griffiths & Co) are unassailable, though several games remain to be played. The championship shield will be presented to Crest House at the annual general meeting of the League in May, when new applications for membership will be considered.

*"Which one? Which one?" thought Alice.
 "Do I drink from the bottle or eat the

 and I should like to be a little larger.
 I'm really quite tired of being the size
 I am". She sighed.
 "But supposing I do the wrong thing..."*

Doing the wrong thing is all too easy in the complex business world of today. Modern financial legislation complicates every decision and it is becoming progressively more dangerous to rely upon instinct. ## A Need of Gratitude

A legacy for the Methodist Homes for the Aged is a means many generous people adopt in expressing gratitude for their own home and for serenity and peace-of-mind in their old age.

There are so many who are less fortunate and for lonely and anxious old people the Methodist Homes for the Aged are a haven and a home. Our constantly growing income from legacies, more than any other factor, has enabled us to embark on the capital expenditure for twenty-five Homes. Unfortunately even these will accommodate only a few of the hundreds of deserving people on the tragically long waiting list.

We thankfully acknowledge this valuable assistance and ask you please to remember the Methodist Homes for the Aged when advising your clients.

now you can recommend a policy backed by the proven record of an established equity portfolio

The W. & G.'s new Equity Policy enables your clients to take advantage of the past performance of the Society's equity portfolio, started in 1954. The table on the right shows the course of the portfolio from inception—and this record is your clients most reliable guide to future prospects. All premiums paid under the policy, and interest earned, are invested solely in the equity portfolio—and, of course, as the law stands, profits are not liable to capital gains tax. At the same time, the life cover given by the policy is absolutely guaranteed, as too are all declared bonuses: so there can be no loss of capital. Two further points of particular interest: control of the complete operation is in the hands of a single, unified management—and the premiums can be paid by monthly Banker's Order, at no extra cost. Looked at either as a method of investing in equities, with lower tax liability and the additional benefit of life cover, or as a means of securing essential life cover with higher than normal bonuses, this policy is bound to prove of considerable interest to your clients. Make sure you have the full facts—contained in our new leaflet—at your fingertips: write now for your copy. Commission of 30/- per £100 sum assured will be paid to accountants, when the first year premium has been received, to cover all costs incurred by them.

Final Part 1 Introductory Courses

The company, who have always been in the lead with the provision of oral tuition in accordance with the changing pattern of examination preparation, have now decided to hold one-week classes by way of introduction to the Part I Final examination of the Institute.

The first of these will be held during the week June 19th to 23rd, i.e. shortly after the announcement of the Intermediate examination results. The emphasis will be on new subjects that students have not met in their Intermediate studies, and in particular on Taxation and Executorship. This should considerably ease the path of students tackling these and other new subjects for the first time. The fee is 12 guineas for a one-week full-time course. Accommodation will be limited, and those wishing to enrol provisionally, while awaiting their Intermediate examination result, may do so on payment of a deposit of £3 3s which will be refunded in the event of cancellation owing to failure in the Intermediate examination.

The Finance Bill

HOPES that this year's Finance Bill would be short and sweet were somewhat dashed when the Bill appeared on Tuesday afternoon. It covers 102 pages, is divided into six parts, and contains forty-three clauses and no less than sixteen schedules.

The first nine schedules are concerned with customs and excise but the tenth – which covers five and a half pages – supplements the new 'group relief' provisions introduced by clause 19. This clause provides that reliefs for trading losses and other amounts eligible for relief from corporation tax may be 'surrendered' by one member of a group of companies to another member, which is called 'the claimant company', and that this is to be done by way of a new relief from corporation tax called 'group relief'. At the same time, the subvention provisions are not to have effect in respect of the deficit of any accounting period ending after the Bill becomes law.

Group relief is confined to bodies corporate resident in the United Kingdom. Broadly speaking, a group is defined on the old profits tax lines but there are exceptions where shares are held as trading stock.

A deceptively brief clause 23 introduces Schedule 11 which covers over eight pages and is devoted to a further cleaning up of the drafting of the corporation tax legislation. Paragraph 4 of Schedule 11 deals with the case where a company is wound up before the corporation tax rate for the period up to dissolution has been fixed. The definition of 'close company' is amended by paragraph 5 which covers over a page and deals with the 35 per cent test for quoted shares.

Another brief clause of less than three lines introduces Schedule 13 which covers three and a half pages and makes amendments to the enactments relating to chargeable gains and tax on short-term capital gains. Loss relief between spouses is extended by paragraph 1. Another paragraph allows small sums received on conversions of securities to be set off against the cost of the securities, instead of being treated as a partial disposal.

Clause 31 and Schedule 14, covering nearly ten pages between them, are directed to excluding development value from computations of capital gains tax on disposals of land effected after April 5th, 1967; this is because of the imposition of betterment levy on such development value and at a different rate – presumably on the principle that two complicated taxes, with their attendant computations, are better than one, even though levied on precisely the same transaction.

The Association's Progress

IN our leading article last week on the 1966 report and accounts of the Council of The Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales, we said that the future strength of a professional body must depend on the quantity and calibre of the current intake of new entrants from schools and universities. It would appear from the report and accounts for 1966 of the Council of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants, recently circulated to members, that the problem of quality recruitment is one of some magnitude. Despite the fact that the numbers of students and graduates are on the increase and that more and more candidates present themselves for examination or, more probably, re-examination (there were in all 10,861 for the four sections of the professional examination in 1966 as against 9,091 in 1965 and 7,222 in 1964), the trend of percentage passes is steadily downward. In section I, only 29 per cent were successful in 1966 compared with 41 per cent in 1965. The corresponding percentages for section II were 39 and 45 and for sections III and IV, 19 and 29 and 32 and 37. In all sections in the past five years only once has a 50 per cent pass been achieved and that was in section I in 1963.

In view of these depressing statistics, it is little wonder that the PRESIDENT of the Association in his presidential address, given at the sixty-second annual general meeting of the members held in London on Tuesday and reproduced elsewhere in this issue, refers to the matter at some length. Mr OLLESON suggests that too many candidates approach their examinations inadequately prepared but fortified by the casual philosophy that luck and good fortune may see them through. With respect, we would suggest that a similar false optimism may dwell in the minds of the masters and employers of many such students and that more intensive interview tests should be applied to prospective entrants. To have the requisite academic preliminary qualifications is not enough. A positive aptitude for accountancy work is also required and that not enough candidates possess this essential quality is convincingly demonstrated by the latest figures which show that only one student out of every nine who sets out to qualify eventually does so.

A feature of the Association's finances year after year is the consistency with which expenditure is so well confined within the limits of the available income that a modest surplus is produced. This year's is £2,657 (as compared with £3,150 for 1965) – a result better even than it looks as it is arrived at after increased depreciation charges. The PRESIDENT points out that higher administration costs in the current year are inevitable and that more rent will be payable following on the acquisition on lease of premises next door to the present headquarters which will give the secretariat some much needed extra elbow-room. The accumulated fund now stands at £96,051.

The various corporate activities of the Association continue undiminished and it is heartening to see it recorded that in the majority of areas district societies continue to receive increased support from members. Although only one booklet, Back Duty Practice Notes, was produced during 1966, the technical research committees and panels held seventy-eight meetings over the year which suggests that there may be material in the publishing pipeline. The courses on computer appreciation inaugurated by the Council in 1965 were continued in 1966 and it is hoped to expand these considerably in the present year. The 1966 week-end school at St John's College, Cambridge, had new management techniques as its theme and the 1967 syllabus will deal with various aspects of business management. Further indications of the forward thinking of the Association is the announcement that questions on electronic computers and electronic data processing are now to be included in the papers on Business Administration in section III and Auditing and Investigations in section IV of the professional examination.

It is usual for the presidential address to contain some comments on the Budget but this year there is little for Mr OLLESON to dwell on. Rightly, he lends his weight and authority to the growing protests against complicated tax legislation and suggests that accountants have expert knowledge and experience which are at the disposal of the CHANCELLOR OF THE EXCHEQUER if he really wishes to simplify the present cumbrous system. The imbalance between political theorizing and practical economic administration is becoming so pronounced that Mr CALLAGHAN sooner or later will have to take heed of these warnings and, for the sake of the sanity of business men, the Inland Revenue authorities and the accountancy profession, the sooner the better.

Current Affairs

The Association's New President

MR J. P. LANDAU, F.A.C.C.A., F.C.I.S., senior partner in Messrs Landau, Morley & Scott, Certified Accountants, of London, was elected President of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants at a meeting of the Council held last Tuesday, following the annual meeting reported on other pages of this issue.

Admitted to membership of the former Corporation of Accountants (Glasgow) in 1930 on his twenty-first birthday, Mr Landau was admitted later that year as a partner in the firm of Clark, Jeffree & Co (later Jeffree, Landau, Maynard & Son). In 1936 he and his partner acquired the latter's principal's practice which had been established in 1890. He became senior partner at the end of 1945 and in January of the following year the firm's name was changed to Landau, Morley & Scott. During the past twenty-one years the number of partners has grown to twenty and there is an associated firm in New York.

Mr Landau became a Fellow of the Chartered Institute of Secretaries in 1937 and at the outbreak of the war, served for a short period with the Board of Trade's Limitation of Supplies Department and later was an assessor under the War Risks Insurance Act 1939, and the War Damage Act 1941. He was also commissioned, firstly as a weapons training officer and then, with the rank of Captain, as an inspecting ordinance officer attached to the 12th County of London Battalion, Home Guard.

Mr Landau, who had specialized in transport finance since 1933, was appointed a panel accountant under the British Transport Commission on the passing of the Transport Act in 1947. In the following year he was appointed an area auditor for British Road Services.

He has devoted much of his time to the affairs of the Association. In recent years he has served continuously on the Taxation Subcommittee of the Technical Research Committee (now Taxation Committee) as well as the Cheque Endorsement, Bankruptcy Law Amendment, Company Law Amendment, Solicitors Accounts Rules and Decimal Currency Committees. He became a member of the Council of the Association in 1962, and has served on all the Association's standing committees.

He has read papers on a variety of professional subjects to district societies, week-end schools and tax conferences and is also a Past-President of the North London Society of Certified Accountants.

Mr Landau was the first certified accountant to be appointed on August 4th, 1964, by the President of the Board of Trade as an Inspector to investigate the affairs of Fiesta Tours Ltd and ten days later, the affairs of Travel & Holiday Clubs Ltd.

A Freeman of the City of London and a member of the Worshipful Company of Basketmakers, Mr Landau is also very active in Freemasonry which takes up most of his time outside his professional activities. He is an avid reader of everything from biblical commentaries to art and is widely travelled, combining business with pleasure on his visits abroad.

The new Vice-President of the Association is Mr E. A. Lediard Smith, F.A.C.C.A., senior partner in Messrs Goodwin & Lediard Smith, Certified Accountants, of Bournemouth.

Specialist Computer Centre for Smaller Companies?

THE National Research Development Corporation is to support an investigation into the feasibility of setting up in Britain a new type of specialist centre to help the small- to medium-sized manufacturing company to install its own computer.

With a firm of consultants, N.R.D.C. is studying a plan which is designed to make the introduction of a computer system simpler and less expensive. Five hundred companies, each with more than one thousand employees, have been approached in order to establish, by market research, what scope there would be for such a centre.

The scheme would mean, in effect, that the centre would finance a company's computer project for the first two years. A team from the centre would train the company's operating and maintenance staff and be responsible for the whole project until the computer-based system was running satisfactorily. Only then would the company be asked to pay for the service provided. The centre would thus enable a company to install and commission its own computer with minimum financial risk and without a large investment in specialized staff.

The centre's team would ensure that the company's computer was used in a way that would really help to increase productivity, and the average six-pay-back period would be substantially reduced.

At the very beginning the centre would make a full economic evaluation of the computer project. It would study the company's operation in detail and give advice on the type of computer system required – all too often in the past companies have chosen the wrong system. The computer would be bought or rented by the company in the normal way, but all staff needed to design a computer-based system would be provided by the centre and the team would also be responsible for transferring work on to the computer.

On the question of priorities, N.R.D.C. states that areas where the computer could make the most dramatic improvements would be tackled first – for example, streamlining production control, as opposed to mechanizing the payroll.

Third Time Unlucky

FOR a third time the Inland Revenue have failed in their attempt to levy tax on Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd ('I.C.I.') in respect of over £3 million lump-sum payments for exclusive licences to manufacture terylene in certain areas (Murray v. I.C.I. (The Times, April 11th)). The Court of Appeal upheld the decisions of the Special Commissioners and of Cross, J., that these sums were capital and not revenue receipts. Moreover it denied leave for the Inland Revenue to appeal to the House of Lords. However, the Inland Revenue can still apply to the House of Lords itself for leave to appeal.

The exclusive licences were reinforced by covenants on the part of I.C.I. not to compete with the licensees in the manufacture of terylene-type products, whether made under the terylene patents or not. The Master of the Rolls said it would not be correct to regard the covenants as standing by themselves. I.C.I. was not a dealer in patent rights or in patent licences. There was no difference in that regard between an assignment of patent rights and the grant of an exclusive licence for the full patent period. It was the disposal of a capital asset, and if the consideration for that disposal was royalties computed by reference to user, they were revenue receipts. If the consideration was a lump sum computed by reference to anticipated user that, too, would normally be income. But if there was an outright disposal for a lump sum having no reference to anticipated user then that would normally be capital. In the present case the lump sums were capital, even though payable by instalments.

Irish Turnover Tax Experience

IN the nineteenth century taxes served only as revenue raisers; their rationalization as instruments of policy and social progress is peculiar to our own time. There are, however, signs that the latter function has become so intricate that taxes orientated towards net retentions now have little practical elasticity so that the need to raise substantial amounts of fresh money has to be satisfied by means which appear distinctly crude against the background of modern refinements.

The purchase tax in the United Kingdom was introduced to assist war-time needs and was retained because of its comparatively low administrative cost to Government (under 1 per cent as compared with a general 2½ per cent).

In the Republic of Ireland the retail sales tax in 1963 and the wholesale tax in 1966 were introduced to increase overall tax yields by a widening of the tax base. Experience of these taxes is reviewed by Dr M. J. MacCormac, who contributes the leading article in the April number of Lloyds Bank Review, and it is noteworthy that an increase approaching 3s in the £ would have been required in the narrower-range income taxes if the 2½ per cent general sales tax had been forgone.

Of special interest is the light shed by Dr MacCormac on the trends, often indirect, towards the value-added turnover tax system both in the European Free Trade Area and the Common Market. However, the Irish experience suggests that when it comes to the point, the need for harmonization of fiscal policies may be but a thin disguise for the imperative need of central government to put its hand in the cash receipts till.

The Use of Extended Credit

THE Engineering Industries Association has for many years investigated the problem of extended credit in the engineering industry and the subsequent financial difficulties caused to suppliers.

This year the annual questionnaire was sent out to all members of the Association in February, asking for the amount of trade debtors outstanding at December 31st, 1966, related to the turnover for the preceding three months, in comparison with corresponding figures as at December 31st, 1965. Replies were received from 228 companies and once again the results revealed that the term of credit taken by debtors is tending to lengthen. It is obvious that many companies who act as subcontractors for larger organizations are under severe pressure through late payment of their accounts.

Similar investigations took place at the end of each calendar year from 1961 to 1965 inclusive, and with the exception of a tendency towards stabilization in 1962 to 1963 there has been an upward trend in the length of credit terms taken as disclosed by the following percentage of debtors to turnover for the preceding three months:

				Percentages
At December 31st,	1961	..	..	78.0
"	"	1962	..	75.6
"	"	1963	..	73.9
"	"	1964	..	81.3
"	"	1965	..	85.9
"	"	1966	..	89.0

Making full allowance for the fact that the statistics were obtained from a different sample each year (1966 - 228 companies; 1961-65 - 100/150 companies), it is quite clear that the requirement for working capital to finance customers' balances continues to increase and has, in fact, been sharply affected by Government policy of the last twelve months. The pressure for finance has been brought about not only by the increase in the terms of credit taken but also by an increase in the volume of money value of sales and debtors. The overall percentage of 89 is equivalent to eighty-two days' credit.

The upward trend is most marked with the smaller and medium-sized companies where the percentage as between 1965 and 1966 went up from 73.8 to 80.1 and from 76.4 to 82.8 respectively. For the larger companies the percentage rose from 88 to 91.2. As with previous findings, the length of credit granted by the large companies is longer than in the case of the smaller companies. The bigger companies may well be engaged upon contracts for capital equipment involving retentions on special long-term arrangements and these factors could explain the somewhat longer term of credit granted by them.

However, the comparatively sharp increases in the demands for credit on the smaller companies is sufficient, the Association states, to warrant recognition and consideration at official levels.

Is Income Tax a Disincentive?

ONE of the most widely held notions is that current levels of taxation represent a real drag on the output of executives by reason of its disincentive effect. Thirteen years ago the Royal Commission on Taxation of Income produced its second report (Cmd 9105) which drew particular attention to the jump of 4s in the marginal rate of tax around the £2,000 mark. In 1957 this was smoothed out by the extension of earned income relief up to £9,945, with reductions of surtax through personal reliefs (1957), earned income relief (1961) and the special '£2,000' exemption which frees a salary up to £5,000 from surtax if there is no significant investment income.

It is therefore interesting to read, in the April salary survey of the Graduate Appointments Register, the results of research into the attitudes of a sample of the most successful men and women currently enrolled. The typical respondent to the questionnaire was in his mid-thirties, married and earning about £2,750 per annum. In reply to the first question, as to whether the executive and his friends spent much time talking about income tax, the answers showed a high percentage of grumbles, the favourite topic being how to reduce one's liability. An accountant of 33 said that conversations about income tax with his personal friends usually meant that he gave a stream of free advice on the subject.

Among the salaried respondents a married production engineer of 37 wrote that he had a good accountant. 'I run a business in my spare time from my house. By legitimately claiming allowance for rent, light, heat, wear and tear, telephone, decorating, travel, etc., this runs at a loss by which I can claim the return of approximately half my income tax. There is still a certain amount of potential here which will increase my loss as my salary increases. In seeking a new position I shall be most influenced by fringe benefits.'

From among the accountants responding, emphasis was laid on the failure to appreciate that income tax rarely claims more than a third of earnings. The general conclusion seemed to be that income tax did not in fact have a disincentive effect, except as regards part-time activities such as lecturing, but that the impact of surtax in the higher ranges led to attitudes which favoured emigration or showed reluctance to take on greater responsibilities.

Accountants awarded Libel Damages

TWO chartered accountants were awarded a total of £8,000 libel damages in the High Court last week for thirty-one words which appeared in a letter sent by an investment company director to Sir Edwin McAlpine of the building company. After retiring for an hour, a jury decided that the words were defamatory and assessed damages of £4,000 in favour of each of the accountants, Mr Norman Harold Davis, F.C.A., of Mildholme, Wembley Park, Middlesex, and Mr Michael Ivor Gee, M.A., F.C.A., of Crosfield Road, Hampstead, London NW.

Mr Davis and Mr Gee, practising as Lane, Heywood & Co, at Portland Place, London W, had sued Mr H. Stanley Rubin and the company of which he is a director, B. & R. Investment Finance Ltd, against whom judgment with costs was entered. Mr Rubin's address and that of the company was given as Deanery Street, London W.

The defendants were given a twenty-one-day stay of execution on the award pending a possible appeal.

Summing up at the end of a three-day action, Mr Justice Swanwick said that the words complained of were: 'It is quite obvious from the references and the type of practice carried on by them and their high-handed actions that my company will not agree to assign to them'.

The words were contained in a letter from Mr Rubin to Sir Edwin McAlpine of December 22nd, 1964, and also published to Sir Robert McAlpine & Sons Ltd.

The defendant company were head landlords of premises in Park Street, London W, which were underlet to McAlpines and at the relevant time the plaintiffs were negotiating with McAlpines for an assignment of their lease.

The judge said that in 1964 the plaintiffs and two other chartered accountants, practising as H. J. Patience & Co, were contemplating a merger. The Park Street premises were originally intended for the merged firms but when the merger broke down the plaintiffs continued the negotiations with McAlpines.

Mr Rubin had had a thirty-year association with Patience & Co in some capacity and had taken an interest in the proposed merger. Mr Rubin had said that when he heard the plaintiffs were going on with the plans for the assignment he thought Patience & Co had not been treated properly. He said he wrote the letter because Sir Edwin was a personal friend to explain his opposition to the proposed assignment. The plaintiffs had said that when they later found out about the letter they were incensed. They considered it reflected upon them in their professional capacity.

The judge told the jury they might think that the reply to the letter indicated that McAlpines did not think any the worse of the plaintiffs for it. But if the jury found the letter defamatory the plaintiffs were entitled to damages. The defendants had denied the words were defamatory. The judge ordered payment out of £500 in Court in part-satisfaction of the judgment.

Parliamentary Questions

ON May 4th, Mr Ian Lloyd (Portsmouth, Langstone) is to ask the First Secretary of State, Mr Michael Stewart, to issue, for the general guidance of those responsible for decisions affecting pricing, reinvestment and distribution policies in the private sector, a precise definition of the term 'reasonable profit', and indicate whether the basis of such a definition is to be capital employed in the business in the economic sense of that term or some other concept.

This is My Life

by An Industrious Accountant

SO far as my employers are concerned I now stand in a dual capacity. I have become a shareholder in the company; as a result of which my feelings have undergone a remarkable metamorphosis which leads to a somewhat disturbing conflict of feelings.

An example occurred recently when the directors were discussing their dividend policy for the forthcoming financial year. Our final dividend had been duly provided for in last year's accounts, so it was opportune to plan for the usual declaration of an interim dividend during the summer at a rate to be now considered, prior to recommending a subsequent final dividend at our next annual general meeting.

Profits, it was agreed gloomily, had not been all that impressive last year, and the current season was showing but sluggish progress. The wages freeze and unenthusiastic staff, coupled with restricted credit and half-hearted customers, as well as the nightmare scarlet graph of ever-increasing costs, presented a depressing picture of the future. Nevertheless we had a good carry-forward in the profit and loss account and as the chairman said – with the air of Archimedes making his great discovery – every cloud had a silver lining. Might he assume, he smiled pleasantly, that we favoured the maintenance of the usual percentage?

A rather doubtful silence ensued. The managing director broke it by referring to the desirability – indeed, he might say the stark necessity – of insuring the stability of the shareholders' equity. Perhaps it would be better to strengthen our liquid position as well as our net worth, by declaring a more nominal rate.

The deputy-chairman assented. Political factors, he said darkly, showed significant undertones. Policy must be flexible in a viable enterprise. Safeguard the shareholders and look to the future rather than disperse our resources, that would be his preference.

I asked what would happen to the shares if we cut the dividend? Surely their price would drop? My innermost instinct of self-preservation was shaken to the core by the double-barrelled shock of seeing my infant capital investment diminish simultaneously with my return on investment. Our share values have been rather precarious recently, swaying in the breeze of the trend of the chairman's annual statement, and the floating investor would undoubtedly unload a parcel of them promptly on a falling market.

The deputy-chairman said that it was a matter of good public relations. National needs in the context of Continental aspirations and international fluidity must be paramount. I hope he understood what he was saying, because nobody else did. Prinny, our personnel director, mused that his hand would be strengthened in his dealings with union claims when the thaw set in by the autumn; they couldn't in decency push for very much after we'd reduced the dividend. The managing director reassured me that in the long run the shareholders would benefit by our improved asset ratios. Indeed, he said complacently, small investors could buy at the lower price with advantage to their portfolio's average costs.

I couldn't see it that way. We have a number of small shareholders whose holdings are deposited with their banks as collateral for loans, and a fall in values might embarrass them. Jam today was better than jam tomorrow. Their nest-eggs were appallingly vulnerable and how could they benefit by a drop in their assets? Besides, dividends should logically be increased to compensate for cost-of-living increases for people who might be in need of the money; therefore raising the share values. . . .

'They'd probably only spend it foolishly on consumer goods or imported luxuries because they don't know any better', said the managing director majestically. 'Anyhow, if there are some faint-hearts who don't rely on us to handle their few shillings to the best advantage, then they had better sell out and take their money elsewhere. We can do without them'.

Charity, Religion and Taxation

by H. S. A. MACNAIR, F.C.A.

IN the context of taxation the term 'charity' means any body of persons or trust established for charitable purposes only. 'Charitable purposes' represent a recurrent theme in tax legislation and the need to interpret this term has occasioned a mint of cases. The die for this currency originated with the preamble to a statute of Elizabeth I in 1601 of which the continued validity is ensured by the Charities Act 1960, but various lines of cases have developed which regulate the distinctions to be drawn between trusts regarded as valid charities and those not so ranking.

The four main branches of 'charitable purposes' in their legal sense were summarized in Special Commissioners of Income Tax v. Pemsel (3 T.C. 53) as (i) the relief of poverty; (ii) the advancement of education; or (iii) religion; and (iv) 'other purposes beneficial to the community'.

As regards the first three, while there are many border-line cases, the following observations may perhaps be hazarded. It seems that, apart from any direct conflict with the law or open offence to other persons, all religions viewed as positive systems of morality are equal in the eyes of the Courts which are not concerned to weigh their pros and cons. Education, too, appears to embrace virtually any activity appropriate to the circumstances of the persons educated which a responsible pedagogue would be prepared to sanction.

It is, however, in the latter field that there is the greatest risk of the boundary fence round the qualifying beneficiaries being drawn without the necessary element of random access termed 'public benefit' – a condition which prevents essentially private responsibilities being aided by the public revenue. On the other hand, some degree of poverty is so general that it is acceptable to restrict access, often by a condition other than that of financial hardship such as the existence of some common nexus, although prospective entrants should stand in some genuine need which they lack the means to satisfy.

Purposes beneficial to the community

The delimitation of the fourth class adumbrated in Pemsel's case, that of purposes beneficial to the community, gives rise to the most general difficulty; partly by reason of the divergence between popular notions of doing good, and the legal concept of trusts the performance of which it must be within the power of the Court to enforce.

Can it be ascertained whether a particular purpose reflects the necessary element of public benefit, by inquiring as to whether it was one which a progressive local authority might be expected to initiate or support? Such an approach would serve to emphasize the invalidity of trusts for political purposes or designed to bring about an alteration in the law (C.I.R. v. National Anti-Vivisection Society (28 T.C. 311)). Its limitations, however, appear from the fact that it was found necessary to enact the Recreational Charities Act 1958 which validates the provision of facilities for recreation or other leisure-time occupation, that is to say, with the object of improving the conditions of life for intended beneficiaries. In order to qualify, the facilities must be available to the public at large (male persons may be excluded) or, if use is restricted, the users must have some special claim by reason of their age, youth, infirmity or disablement, poverty or social and economic circumstances.

Another problem arises from the reluctance of the Courts to recognize as charitable, a general discretion to extend the scope of admittedly valid objects by the addition of further activities to be selected by the trustees. The possibility of misapprehension on this point, even among the initiated, was highlighted in recent years, some effort being made to put right past mistakes by the Charitable Trusts (Validation) Act 1954.

It is worth bearing in mind that charities enjoy selective, not comprehensive, exemption from taxation, e.g. in relation to stamp duty they escaped the enhancement of certain scales applicable to sales and leases from 1947 to 1963, but this privilege lapsed when the rates of duty reverted to the former level.

Income tax exemptions

Part XXII of the Income Tax Act 1952, as amended, categorizes the income tax exemptions for charities. Interest, annuities, dividends or shares of annuities derived from governmental or other public sources and charged under Schedule C, rank for relief if held by a charity and applied to charitable purposes.

A similar relief is accorded to trust income applicable and applied solely towards the repairs of any cathedral, college, church or chapel, or any building used solely for the purpose of divine worship. Furthermore, charities obtain relief in respect of dividends on shares of companies resident in the United Kingdom (paragraph 3 (1), Schedule 5, Finance Act 1966), yearly interest or other annual payments dealt with under Schedule D, with an extension by extra-statutory concession to bank interest, whether yearly or not, and to discount on Treasury bills.

It should be noticed that to qualify as an annual payment it is necessary to satisfy the test in section 392 which excludes payments for a period which cannot exceed six years. Moreover, the policy of an appeal organizer may be influenced by the nullifying effect of reciprocal benefits to subscribers (C.I.R. v. National Book League (36 A.T.C. 130; 37 T.C. 455)), as well as the circumstance that individuals are unable to obtain surtax relief in respect of such payments (section 415); although companies may treat them as deductions for corporation tax purposes (section 52, Finance Act 1965), subject to the requirement that the payments must be equal in amount and that the series is not capable of premature determination without the consent of the charity. One may notice here a device whereby funds can be made immediately available to a charity despite the minimum period (in practice involving seven or more instalments) over which the charity may recover tax. The arrangement takes the form of a loan equal to the aggregate net sums outstanding under the deed, repayments being linked with subsequent instalments. Despite adverse criticism by the Royal Commission in 1955 (Cmd 9474, paragraph 185) this practice seems innocent enough since repayment of income tax is not thereby accelerated.

Another category of income tax exemptions under Schedule D concerns the rents and profits of any lands (including tenements, hereditaments and heritages) held by a charity. However, relief in respect of the profits of a trade carried on by a charity is available only if the trade is exercised in the course of the actual carrying out of a primary purpose of the charity, or if the work in connection with it is mainly carried on by beneficiaries of the charity. A secondary condition is that the profits therefrom should be applied to the purposes of the charity but this rule does not of itself avail to grant exemption from tax where the trade is carried on merely as a means of raising funds. (Trustees of Psalms and Hymns v. Whitwell (3 T.C. 7) and The Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland v. Forbes (3 T.C. 415)).

Capital gains

A charity is exempt from income tax chargeable under Case VII of Schedule D in respect of short-term gains and from the tax chargeable on long-term gains, whether in the form of capital gains tax or corporation tax. There are, however, certain points to watch in this context. Thus, if property held on charitable trusts ceases to be so held, the event precipitates a notional disposal which brings in its train a charge on long-term gains occasioned thereby, together with a retrospective charge on previous disposals so far as these are represented by the assets thus losing their exempt status. For this purpose normal time limits are extended to a date three years after the end of the year of assessment in which the property in question ceases to qualify as held for charitable purposes.

It is also necessary to notice the various provisions which prevent charities recovering income tax as a result of participation in 'beyond the fringe' transactions frowned upon by section 25 of the Finance Act 1959 (securities held for less than one month or, if not innocently, six months) and section 65 (5) of the Finance Act 1965 (dividend-stripping) to which is related section 31 (4) (a) of the Finance Act 1966 and certain double taxation agreements.

Estate duty

Another area of exemption occurs in the context of estate duty. Section 59 (1) of the Finance (1909-10) Act 1910 preserves the rule stemming from section 38 (2) (a) of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act 1881, whereby property taken under a voluntary disposition purporting to operate as an immediate gift inter vivos is excluded if bona fide made twelve months before the relevant death for public or charitable purposes. As indicated in Pemsel's case, 'public' purposes are wider than 'charitable' purposes as discussed above.

Moreover, in circumstances where a claim to duty does arise against a charitable institution by virtue of a gift, but at the donor's death there is no existing fund which has been and continues to be directly benefited thereby, the Revenue refrain from pursuing the claim, in accordance with an extra-statutory concession.

Betterment levy

Section 27 of the Land Commission Act 1967 imposed the 'betterment levy', to be charged where the development value of land is realized on or after a date which has been designated as April 6th, 1967. The occasions of realization ('chargeable act or event') are distinguished under the six Cases A to F elaborated in Part III of the Act. Certain exemptions are accorded by section 57 in respect of an interest in land held immediately before the relevant date if that interest is then held by or in trust for a charity of which it forms part of the permanent endowment.

The latter term means no more than that the net proceeds of sale must be subject to a restriction on their being expended indiscriminately as between income and capital, but it is extended to cover any land which forms part of the corporate property of a corporation sole or aggregate established for spiritual purposes in the Church of England (section 90).

As regards Case B, which concerns tenancies for not less than seven years or certain transactions for shorter periods notified under section 37 (2), exemption is granted where the interest out of which the tenancy is created subsists in qualifying land.

'Land' is defined by section 3 of the Interpretation Act 1889 as inclusive of buildings of any tenure (with specific mention of houses, messuages, tenements and hereditaments), and to qualify in this context it must have been used wholly or mainly for the purposes of the charity (or another charity) for some period of at least twelve months. However, subsequent disuse is tolerated unless there is 'appropriation' to non-charitable purposes – a term which signifies more than five years' use wholly or mainly for purposes other than those of a charity.

Similar rules apply to Case A (a sale, the creation of a perpetual ground-rent or, in Scotland, a feu, an assignment of a lease for seven years or over, and certain 'notifications' as mentioned above); Case D (various types of compensation in the context of the Planning Acts); Case E (relating to easements) and Case F (residual and general).

For exemption under Case C (development projects), it is only necessary that the assessable interest (see section 32) in land comprised in a project should be held by the charity for the purposes of which the project is to be wholly or mainly carried out. If, however, some other purpose is in prospect, exemption is still accorded (so far as the charity's interest is concerned) if either the 'permanent endowment' or the 'qualifying use' tests referred to above are satisfied.

Expenses of the clergy

The position of employees of a corporate charity may be regarded as privileged in so far as the 'over £2,000 a year' provisions of Chapter II, Part VI of the Income Tax Act 1952 have no application to it as regards either expenses or benefits. Moreover, in relation to the rules for employee-occupiers of premises in the United Kingdom, as set out in section 47 of the Finance Act 1963, no liability is to attach to persons from time to time holding any full-time office as clergyman or minister of any religious denomination (or a particular person holding such an office) as regards the availability to them in relevant premises of a residence from which to perform the duties of the office.

Premises are relevant if an interest therein belongs to a charity or ecclesiastical corporation. Furthermore, if in accordance with any statutory obligation to make payments or bear deductions by reason of such occupation an incumbent is out of pocket and has these burdens made good to him, the relief is to be disregarded except to the extent that it is attributable to any part of the premises yielding rent to him. Nor is he to be chargeable by reference to the value to him of any expenses incurred in connection with the provision therein of living accommodation for him (section 20, Finance Act 1961).

The scope of these exemptions is rounded off by the grant of a deduction from his vocational emoluments (whether assessable under Schedule D or E) to the extent of one-quarter of expenses borne in the maintenance, repairs, insurance or management of such premises. The latter claim may not, however, be duplicated under section 479 of the Income Tax Act 1952 which permits a corresponding deduction of rent, up to one-quarter, paid in respect of a dwelling-house, any part of which is used mainly and substantially for the purposes of his duty as clergyman or minister.

The same section is the authority for the deduction of any expenses so incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily. A practical instance of qualifying expenses is that of transport (Jardine v. Gillespie (5 T.C. 263)) while the disallowable character of supply or assistance appears from Lothian v. Macrae (2 T.C. 65).

Easter offerings

This leads on to consideration of the tax position of the clergy in relation to receipts. The freewill element in the offerings of the congregation does not preclude taxability if associated with an occasion of duty as in the case of collections taken up at Christmas (In re Strong (1 T.C. 207)); Easter (Cooper v. Blakiston (5 T.C. 347)); or Whitsun (Slaney v. Starkey (10 A.T.C. 100; 16 T.C. 45)).

The rule is one which looks to the office rather than the holder (Herbert v. McQuade (4 T.C. 489)) so that no liability would arise in the case of receipts attributable to personal circumstances such as material need (Turton v. Cooper (5 T.C. 138)); or special zeal (Turner v. Cuxson (2 T.C. 422)); or to items received in the fiduciary capacity of a mission priest (Daly v. C.I.R. (13 A.T.C. 259; 18 T.C. 641)).

Practical effect is given to a charity's entitlement to exemption by a claim to the Board of Inland Revenue as indicated in Schedule 2 to the Income Tax Management Act 1964. The Board may delegate any of their powers relating to claims to their officer, e.g. the Chief Inspector of Taxes (Claims), Charity Division, Seaford House, Waterloo Road, Seaford, Liverpool 21, from whom the appropriate forms may be obtained.

The necessity for making use of such forms appears from section 6 of that Act which is also the authority for requiring a declaration and, if called for, a return of income in support of the claim. Immediate effect may be given to a claim by discharge or repayment but, in the event of an adverse decision, thirty days are allowed within which to bring an appeal to the Special Commissioners. The latter may vary the decision in question, possibly to the disadvantage of the claimant. However, in the event of the claimant subsequently discovering that an error or mistake has been made in his claim, he may make a supplementary one within the time allowed for making the original claim.

Management Education in Europe—II

by A. T. PIERCE-GROVE, A.C.A., Dipl.INSEAD.

Managing director (at board meeting): We seem to be having a certain number of problems with the profitability of our French (German Italian, Swiss, etc.) subsidiary. I am not quite sure what is going on, but I feel that we ought to be doing something about it. We need a man who . . .

WHETHER the United Kingdom enters the Common Market or not, the type of situation indicated above is becoming more frequent. It is usually politically expedient to have nationals managing more or less autonomous subsidiaries in most foreign countries, and the problems of international management and control are becoming acute. Various solutions have been proposed in technical and management journals ranging from close control to complete autonomy.

One common denominator of all the solutions is that certain members of the middle and top echelons of management must be conversant with foreign business habits, taxation, law, etc. as well as being good managers. This type of manager is hard to find, particularly in the financial field where the differences in accounting and legal practices present very real difficulties. At the same time the financial men in a company exert considerable influence on the decision to 'go international', or to increase the scope of foreign operations. This influence is at its greatest if the financial officers have overall business experience and training in the international context.

Where to gain knowledge and experience?

In 1964 the author, a newly-qualified accountant, decided that the market for internationally-trained managers was one with distinct potential. Since the first principle of marketing is to adapt the product to the market, he looked around for the best method of gaining the necessary knowledge and experience to fit himself for this market, in which his professional training could be used as a base upon which to build. He decided upon INSEAD.

The European Institute of Business Administration (INSEAD) at Fontainebleau, forty miles from Paris, was founded in 1958 by a group of French Harvard Business School graduates with the backing of the Paris Chamber of Commerce, and many American and European firms. It is a graduate business school using, to a great extent, Harvard methods, but offering a one-year course instead of two as at Harvard. Furthermore, a number of the participants have several years' commercial experience (which is obviously the case for accountants).

It is not specifically a French organization, for there are British, Dutch and other non-French governors and professors, and the participants are admitted on a basis which does not allow any individual nationality to predominate.

Although INSEAD is situated in France, with a large number of French-speaking participants, English is the main working language. Approximately 50 per cent of all class-work, oral and written, is in English, 30 per cent in French and 20 per cent in German. (For admission, all candidates must speak two of these languages fluently and have a working knowledge of the third).

The participants, about one hundred and fifty in number and coming from some twenty different countries, are lodged in INSEAD residences, usually sharing a room with a man of a different nationality, background and education. Married participants are helped to find suitable accommodation.

Discussion meetings

Pre-classroom discussion of case material takes place – after private study – in small groups of six or seven, with nationalities and academic backgrounds carefully mixed. A typical group might consist of a Swedish lawyer, a German economist, a French engineer, an Italian commerce graduate, an English historian, and one or two others. The experience gained, both in problem solving and in dealing with people of totally different backgrounds, is invaluable (as is the discovery that generalities about nationalities are totally unrealistic).

The syllabus fits into the normal business school pattern of marketing, production, men and organization, finance, quantitative analysis, management information systems, business policy, and a special course on the European environment of business. In all subjects, once the initial techniques have been taught, the participants are given 'cases' out of real business life on which to use them. This is, of course, the standard business school approach; but it is the internationalism of INSEAD which sets it apart.

Although most of the basic textbooks are American, the cases deal with European as well as American firms, and the problems symptomatic of European, rather than national, businesses are given a thorough airing (e.g. family-dominated or paternalistic enterprises; difficulties of integrating foreign work-people; different and/or archaic accounting practices; implantation on foreign markets; means for overcoming measures designed to avoid competition, etc.). This is

a good interest rate and security, isn't the best answer Building Societies?

Building Society interest rates are income tax paid. This is something would-be investors have a habit of overlooking. A pity. Because a Building Society rate is often equivalent to the 'before tax' rates quoted for other forms of investment. And on the subject of security: what could be safer than investment in owner-occupied property? Five more excellent reasons for saving with a Building Society make up the 'Big Seven'. You won't find them together anywhere else.

ONLY BUILDING SOCIETIES GIVE YOU THE 'BIG SEVEN' BENEFITS

1. Utmost security, because the money goes into the most solid of all investments: owner-occupied property.
2. Interest on a range of savings schemes is equivalent to more than 7% for the standard rate taxpayer because . . .
3. . . income tax is paid by the Building Society.
4. Freedom from market fluctuations.
5. Easy withdrawals at short notice.
6. No charges, no expenses.
7. Over-the-counter service: swift, efficient and friendly.

the aspect of INSEAD which makes it worth while for a man whose tastes and outlook are not limited by national boundaries.

Integrating specialist skills

The young accountant is frequently faced by the attitude that only if he is employed on the financial side of a business, is he worth paying the salary he expects to gain after several years' training. If he wishes to move over into general management, he must demonstrate that he has learned to integrate the specialist skills of an accountant into the general framework, of business administration.

Although there is no real substitute for practical experience, the nearest alternative is for him to go to a business school, either national or international, depending on his personal taste and future career plans.

Audits up the Glen

by R. WENDELL JONES, F.C.A.

DEER forests have always struck me as more exclusive than grouse moors, and there is a certain patrician flavour in the audit of a deer forest which is somehow lacking in that of a brewery. Such an assignment had the dual attraction of gorgeous scenery and an utter remoteness from my city office, and I jumped at the opportunity.

British Railways having been compelled to abandon any attempt to get within fifty miles of the place – due to a dearth of inhabitants rather than any more abstruse cause – it was agreed that morale would only be kept at a reasonable level by the presence of my car. Seizing the concession, I rapidly negotiated a mileage allowance exceeding the usual norm of 3d. In the early afternoon of the second day I cruised peacefully into the little village of Buicchaille (pronounced Buckle) on the edge of the estate, deposited a mixed bag of climbing boots, rucksack and brief case, and set out energetically in search of the factor.

Rather elusive

My past experience of this Caledonian-type land agent was limited to a reading of Guy Mannering. Glossin, I remembered, was hardly an amiable character and came to an unsavoury end. Sir Walter did not approve of the breed but I must not let his experiences influence my judgement. MacSparrow had always seemed a little elusive at the non-business end of a 600-mile phone call, and on his rare visits to Leadenhall Street he looked as much out of his depth as one of his deer would have done on the bowling green in Finsbury Circus.

I pursued some inquiries. MacSparrow was not awaiting my arrival with bated breath, but attending the last rites of one of his crofters; it was thought that he would not be long delayed. I have often found my conscience a trial; and never more so than when I feel that I ought to be clocking time to a client, in a manner beloved of audit managers, and am not. However, there was no factor and therefore no books, and so for the next two hours I was regaled by a really charming old lady with an excellent repast of tea cakes and scones, and a synopsis of local clan history over the last two hundred years. I recollected a useful resting place called 'discussion with client' and held my peace.

Wear and tear on illicit still

In due course the factor arrived in a happier frame of mind than usual; we celebrated with something he called Gaelic tea, and I heard some excellent illicit still stories. My favourite concerns the little man whose distilling equipment was suffering from fair wear and tear; hearing that the authorities were offering a reward for the discovery of stills, he led the gauger to the spot, whereupon his primitive machinery was duly confiscated. In due time he received his reward and went back into business once more a little higher up the glen.

Practice and principals have long convinced me of the importance of verifying the stock-in-trade. It was therefore with something of a shock that I learned that deer – surely the most logical form of stock – could wander at will from one estate to the next; further, that in season it was permissible for the laird or his guests to let fly at any stag which raised an inquiring head of antlers over his heather, without asking from whence it came.

I next learnt that a deer forest has no trees; indeed, the whole balance sheet was something of a misnomer. I was relieved to find that previous years' working papers revealed a farm account and a very definite stock of sheep. I have long possessed a preference for stocks which could be placed in bins and counted, or in vats and weighed or measured, so it was gratifying to find any form of current asset, even if subject to natural accretion.

Dipping time

Limited rural experience assured me that lambing took place in March, and by April 5th both lambs and ewes would be gathered in by kindly shepherds and subjected to effective census. I broached the matter to MacSparrow. He assured me that this was nearer Sutherland than Sussex, that the sheep were still in lamb and could not be moved without dire results; and that the estate covered 40,000 acres not 400. The unfortunate sheep would be enumerated at dipping time later in the season and the results back-dated to April 5th. If in doubt there was a subtle formula, successfully applied for many years – where  $x$  represented opening stock + purchases less sales;

$z$  = known deaths.

Even I could see that the doubling of  $z$ , whilst intended to take into account those sheep who tumbled over remote crags, fell victim to eagles or merely sank in the peat bog, would also provide a useful margin for others who died by (and  $z$ , of course, could be increased at will) shepherd's pie or other hazards. Capital gains tax algebra had nothing on this.

The only cows available did not in the least resemble conventional cows but were great hairy monsters, very fearsome of aspect when met on the way back from the local on a lonely night.

Not quite gentlemanly

I transferred my attention to the other side of the balance sheet. As a firm we had always made a point of obtaining outside evidence of liabilities. Examination of the previous year's schedules showed that we had sometimes allowed our high standards to slip a little and had accepted reluctantly MacSparrow's casual estimates. Often the outstanding bill had not come in when the next year's accounts came round. By local custom it was not considered quite gentlemanly to render a bill before at least two years had elapsed, by which time the recipient's memory of the work done had become a little hazy. As the Sassenach on the spot, however, I felt that this should be remedied and spoke to some of the feckless creditors, having learnt by this time that the locals' in trays were as deep as their lochs. The word passed rapidly round the glens, and statements poured in by the score.

Unfortunately MacSparrow's £30 accrual too often finalized at £300, especially if the respective clans had not been on the same side in the 'forty-five'.

MacSparrow's, absentee landlord, a kilted figure about seven feet tall of whom MacSparrow stood in some awe – a feeling I shared – usually had firm opinions on subjects like this and we could hear the postmistress (she steamed open the mail, too) gasp when the line became too hot.

This seemed an appropriate moment to explore the estate; I exchanged my country suit for boots, breeches and anorak and vanished into the hinterland. Returning many hours later wet and bedraggled, I gave the factor my considered opinions of his peat bogs. 'Och. They can come over your top,' he said, and encouraged me to go again.

Minimizing the risk

Society was limited, and in default of an articulated clerk I spent my evenings in journeys to the local in company with MacSparrow and his large dog. MacSparrow's loneliness derived from his belonging to the wrong clan, one moreover which had done something particularly unspeakable higher up the glen in 1574; indeed, he owed his appointment to this regrettable incident. The laird had once read an auditing textbook and ever since had tried to minimize the risk of collusion on his estates. Although he paid his factor's salary and gave him a house, as a good Highlander the laird was unable to forgive him 1574 and he regarded the factor as the residuary legatee of all possible crimes. MacSparrow assured me that it was a moot point whether a year's feu rent from a crofter was equal to or less than the price of a whisky; maybe he was hinting at his lack of opportunity.

Each week I discovered a piece of the estate which even the head stalker had never visited. Each day a few more bills would be delivered and their total divided equitably between house, stalking and farm accounts. Life passed pleasantly, disturbed only occasionally by obscure tax queries from a far distant city. The mañana of highland life, a thousand miles from the rat race, had me enmeshed.

Calming effect

The laird arrived for his annual holiday and the little village was full of his gillies. Apparently it reduced the chance of homicide if he and MacSparrow did not meet for the first week or so of the stalking season, and in consequence I was the obvious go-between. Relations became rather strained over a matter of cream teas supplied to the shepherds at the last lambing, but the calm of autumn in the glens had its gradual effect and the laird ultimately found it possible to discuss the accounts without screaming at MacSparrow's name. But I felt it was time for me to be on my way. . . .

Two days later I stood before my manager. 'You', said he, 'were due to start the audit of a screw manufacturer in Birmingham at the beginning of last week.'

Betterment Levy – VII

by K. BUCKLEY EDWARDS

LAST week's article dealt with a number of exemptions from levy under Case C, including a limited exemption for builders and developers of residential property under section 62. To escape levy under that section the builder or developer must have owned the land or interest in the land or been under a firm contract to buy it before September 23rd, 1965.

Paragraph 11 of Schedule 5 contains provisions which may have the effect of reducing the amount of levy payable by builders and developers of residential property, as defined, where land is purchased or taken on lease for valuable consideration after August 1st, 1966, but before April 6th, 1967. In such a case, if:

- (a) the project of material development in question has as its principal purpose the provision of 'housing accommodation' as defined in section 62 (8);
- (b) the carrying out of the project is begun before October 6th, 1967;
- (c) under the 'disposition' (sale, or grant of lease) the 'chargeable owner', as defined in Schedule 5, paragraph 2 (1), or a predecessor of his has become entitled to the chargeable interest;
- (d) the chargeable owner is a builder or developer of residential property within section 62 (7);

then, the builder or developer can take into account the price which he paid for the land, or the rent, as the case may be, for the purpose of calculating the net development value of the land. As the builder or developer will presumably have paid market value for the land, this means that his base value will be the amount of the market value, with the result that there will be little or nothing on which he has to pay levy, while the vendor or grantor will pay nothing since the transaction took place before April 6th, 1967; but the above concession does not apply to Case A, B, D, E or F.

Under section 63 the Ministers may by order direct that no levy shall be charged in such circumstances falling within any of Cases A to F as may be specified in the order; but no order can be made under the section unless a draft of the order has been laid before the Commons House of Parliament and approved by a resolution of that House.

Case D

Section 33, relating to levy in Case D, applies where development value in land is notionally realized under section 27 by a person becoming entitled to compensation under Part VII of the Town and Country Planning Act 1962, or under Part II of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1947, or under Part IV of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1954, for depreciation in the value of an interest in land in consequence of:

- (a) an order under section 27 of the 1962 Act or under section 19 of the Scottish Act of 1947 revoking or modifying a planning permission already granted; or
- (b) a planning decision whereby planning permission is refused, or is granted subject to conditions other than those previously imposed by a development order, in the circumstances mentioned in section 119 (1) of the Act of 1962 or in section 20 (3) of the Scottish Act of 1947; or
- (c) an order under section 28 of the Act of 1962 or under section 24 of the Scottish Act of 1947 requiring a use of land to be discontinued, or imposing conditions on the continuance of that use, or requiring any buildings or works on land to be altered or removed.

No other rights to compensation for adverse planning decisions are affected by Case D, so that compensation payments under Part VI of the 1962 Act for planning decisions adversely affecting 'new development' within section 12 (5) of that Act are not within the scope of Case D.

Levy is charged in respect of the right to compensation on the amount of the compensation, as reduced by the 'appropriate deduction' (below); and for the purpose of assessing the levy the following matters are to be ascertained, viz.:

- (a) the amount of the compensation, to be calculated in accordance with Part IV of Schedule 4;
- (b) the base value of the relevant interest before the adverse planning decision, to be calculated in accordance either with Part IV of Schedule 4 or with Schedule 5;
- (c) the amount of any expenditure on improvements or on ancillary rights in so far as it has increased the development value of that interest, to be calculated in accordance with Part V of Schedule 4; and
- (d) the restricted value of that interest after the depreciation, to be calculated in accordance with Part IV of Schedule 4. In all four cases ((a) to (d)) the provisions of Schedule 6 also apply where relevant.

There must then be calculated the amount, if any, by which the aggregate of the value and amount in paragraphs (b) and (c), above, exceeds the value specified in paragraph (d) above. The amount of the excess, if any, will then be the 'appropriate deduction', which must be subtracted from the amount of compensation payable by the local authority in order to find the net amount of compensation on which levy is payable (subsections (2)-(4)).

The 'relevant interest' means the interest in respect of which the right to compensation accrues; the 'relevant order or decision' means the order or planning decision which gave rise to the right to compensation, and the 'relevant date' is that by reference to which the compensation has to be assessed (subsection (5)). The person liable to pay levy under Case D is the person who receives the compensation from the local authority.

Notification to Commission

Section 40 requires an authority paying compensation to which section 33 applies to give to the Commission within thirty days after the date on which the compensation is paid the particulars prescribed by regulation 7 of and Part I of Schedule 3 to the Betterment Levy (Notification) Regulations 1967 with respect to all or any of the following matters:

- (a) the interest in respect of which the right to compensation has accrued, the land in which that interest subsists, and the person entitled to that interest;
- (b) the enactment by virtue of which the right to compensation has accrued;
- (c) the relevant order or decision;
- (d) the amount of the compensation and the date on which it was paid;
- (e) how much of the compensation is in respect of depreciation of the value of the interest in land;
- (f) any other matters appearing to the appropriate Minister or Ministers to be relevant for the purpose of assessing levy in Case C.

Item (e), above, is necessary to enable the Commission to distinguish between the compensation payable in respect of an interest in land, and that which represents the cost of complying with the adverse planning decision, for example, where it involves the demolition of buildings or abortive expenditure on plans, siteworks, etc.

Method of assessment

The amount of compensation will be the amount notified to the Commission as the sum payable in respect of the depreciation in value of the land, as distinct from other compensation. This amount will then be reduced by any valuation costs incurred, pursuant to paragraph 19 of Schedule 6.

Base value, calculated in accordance with Schedule 4, requires the current use value of the interest to be ascertained as if the planning decision had not been made, but on the assumption that planning permission would be granted only for development which does not constitute material development. The current use value, thus ascertained, and increased by one-tenth, will be taken as the base value, except that where the interest concerned is a reversion the one-tenth increase applies only to the reversionary value of that interest.

Schedule 5 base value is derived from the consideration paid for the relevant interest of the previous disposition, adjusted where purchased after April 6th, 1967, for any increase or decrease in current use value, in accordance with paragraph 14 (2) of Schedule 5. And where the interest is a tenancy or reversion, Regulations 7 and 8 of the Betterment Levy (Tenancies and Reversions) Regulations 1967, contain special provisions for adjusting the Schedule 5 base value. The reason for this is that where a tenancy is granted, there is also created the reversion expectant on the termination of that tenancy. If the terms of the tenancy are such that development value is being realized, then the tenant will expect to be permitted to take this into account if he is subsequently involved in a chargeable act or event. Likewise, the landlord will expect to be permitted to take the transaction into account on a subsequent occasion of liability to levy.

To whichever base value is adopted (whether Schedule 4 or Schedule 5) there must be added, where necessary, any appropriate amount in respect of a related tenancy (page 470, ante), and an allowance for expenditure on improvements or ancillary rights so far as it has increased the market value of the relevant interest, calculated as for Case A. The restricted value of the interest must then be assessed in accordance with paragraph 39 of Schedule 4, taking into account the effect of the adverse planning decision. As has been seen, supra, the difference between the base value before the adverse planning decision (plus any expenditure on improvements and ancillary rights) and the restricted value after the adverse planning decision will be the amount of the 'appropriate deduction' which, subtracted from the amount of the compensation, will leave the amount on which levy is chargeable.

Credits carried forward

A credit may arise from an assessment to levy under Case D where the appropriate deduction exceeds the amount of the compensation, when the amount of the excess will be the amount of the 'credit'. If a credit is carried forward from an earlier assessment, whether or not under Case D, then on a subsequent chargeable act or event under Case D that credit can be offset against liability to levy on a subsequent occasion. If the credit is less than or equal to the difference between the compensation and the appropriate deduction (the 'primary amount'), the primary amount is reduced by the credit and the credit is extinguished. But if the credit is greater than the primary amount, then the latter is extinguished and the amount of the credit is reduced accordingly. The balance of the credit may then be utilized on a subsequent chargeable act or event until it is extinguished, but a subsequent chargeable act or event is relevant for the purpose of allowing a credit carried forward to be taken into account only if it meets specified requirements (Schedule 11, paragraphs 5 (2), (6)).

Examples

1. Planning permission for the building of ten houses on a plot of land purchased in 1945 has been revoked by the local planning authority and compensation of £10,000 is payable, none of which relates to abortive expenditure. The value for current use purposes before and after the revocation is £1,000. There is no expenditure on improvements or ancillary rights.

the current use value was £250. On October 1st, 1967, X spent £500 on improvements which added to the development value. On January 1st, 1968, an order was made under section 27 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1962, modifying the planning permission so as to permit development at only eight houses to the acre, with the reservation of part of the site as an open space. The open market value at January 1st, 1968, at twelve houses to the acre was £10,000 and at eight houses to the acre was £8,000. The current use value at January 1st, 1968, would have been £500, but as a result of the improvement has decreased to £200. # Taxation Cases

C.I.R. v. Brebner

In the House of Lords – February 23rd, 1967

Income tax – Transaction in securities – Whether purpose a bona fide commercial one – Whether purpose to obtain tax advantage – Finance Act 1960, section 28.

The taxpayer engaged in a number of transactions with a company in which he was interested as a shareholder and a director, and the purpose of the transactions was to defeat a take-over bid. One of the transactions was the capitalization of some of the reserves and the application of the resulting sum in paying up ordinary shares which were allotted to the shareholders, among whom was the respondent.

The Inland Revenue served on the taxpayer a counter-acting notice under section 28 of the Finance Act 1960, contending that that particular transaction had as its main object, or one of its main objects, to enable the shareholders to obtain a tax advantage. It was contended for the taxpayer that the only purpose of the transaction was to defeat a take-over bid. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the taxpayer.

Held (affirming the decision of the Court of Session): the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Halefield Securities Ltd v. Thorpe

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) – March 3rd, 1967

(Before Mr Justice STAMP)

Income tax – Trade loss – Transactions in shares – Whether company a share-dealer – Income Tax Act 1952, section 341.

The accounts of the appellant company, up to those for the period ended March 31st, 1961, were in a form appropriate to a shareholding company. Shortly after those accounts had been prepared, another set of accounts in a form appropriate to a share-dealing company were prepared and these accounts were adopted at a general meeting of the company.

The company acquired and disposed of shares in another company, and made a loss thereon. It was contended for the company (a) that during the years of claim, 1960–61 and 1961–62, the company was carrying on the trade of a dealer in shares; (b) alternatively, that the acquisition and disposal of those shares was itself a trading transaction; (c) that the loss in question qualified for relief under section 341 of the Income Tax Act 1952. The General Commissioners rejected the claim.

Held: the General Commissioners' decision was correct.

Pook v. Owen

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) – March 3rd, 1967

(Before Mr Justice STAMP)

Income tax – Office or employment – Expenses – Medical practitioner – Part-time appointment at hospital – General practice at residence – Travelling expenses between residence and hospital – Whether expenses deductible – Income Tax Act 1952, Schedule 9, paragraph 7.

The taxpayer carried on practice as a general medical practitioner at his residence. He also held a part-time appointment as obstetrician and anaesthetist at a hospital about fifteen miles away. He was on stand-by duty at the hospital, as obstetrician, one week-end a month, and, as anaesthetist, on two nights a week and one week-end a month. During those periods he had to be accessible by telephone. His responsibility for a patient begins as soon as he receives the telephone call. On receipt of the call he gives instructions to the hospital staff, and usually he then sets out immediately by car for the hospital; but sometimes he advises treatment by telephone and awaits a further report. At times the telephone call is received when he is out on his rounds. He was also on call to attend obstetric emergency cases anywhere in the county at any time.

The taxpayer was assessed under Schedule E in respect of his emoluments from the hospital. He was also paid travelling expenses at a fixed rate, but his actual expenses for 1962–63 and 1963–64 were greater than the sums he thus received. He claimed to be entitled to deduct the balance in computing his emoluments for the purpose of assessment under Schedule E. The General Commissioners decided in his favour.

Held: the expenses in question were not imposed by the nature of the taxpayer's office or employment, but were personal to him, and were therefore not within paragraph 7 of Schedule 9 to the Income Tax Act 1952, and so were not deductible.

McCrone v. C.I.R.

In the Court of Session – March 3rd, 1967

Surtax – Settlement – Sum paid by trustees to settlor – Government stock transferred – Secured on landed property – Whether a capital sum – Whether a secured loan within the section – Income Tax Act 1952, section 408.

In 1946 and 1947 the taxpayer made settlements on his three daughters, and the trustees were empowered to accrue to income. In 1958 the trustees transferred to the taxpayer Government stock of the value of £45,100, and the taxpayer paid £100 to the trustees so as to leave the amount he desired. He granted a bond and disposition in security to the trustees over his farm, and paid interest at 6 per cent per annum. The stock so transferred represented trust income. The trustees were repaid in 1964.

It was contended on behalf of the Revenue that a capital sum, in the form of a sum paid by way of loan, had been paid by the trustees to the taxpayer; that the transaction was within section 408 of the Income Tax Act 1952; and that an assessment to surtax on the appellant in respect thereof was valid. It was contended for the taxpayer (1) that a 'capital sum' had not been paid to him, in that he had received securities; (2) that as the loan was secured, it was not within the section; (3) the transaction was an investment by the trustees. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the Revenue.

Held: the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Bourne v. Norwich Crematorium Ltd

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) – March 7th, 1967

(Before Mr Justice STAMP)

Income tax – Capital allowances – Crematorium – Furnace chamber and chimney tower – Whether industrial building or structure – Income Tax Act 1952, sections 265, 266, 271.

The respondent company carried on the trade of disposing of the human dead by cremation, and was assessed under Case I of Schedule D. It owned a crematorium comprising a furnace chamber and chimney tower, a chapel and memorial gardens.

The company claimed to be entitled to capital allowances for the furnace chamber and chimney tower, in that they formed an industrial building or structure because the cremating of human bodies was 'the subjection of goods or materials to any process' within the meaning of those words in section 271 (1) (c) of the Income Tax Act 1952. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the company.

Held: the cremating of human bodies was not a process within section 271 (1) (c); and that the claim ought not to have been allowed.

Lush v. Coles

In the High Court of Justice (Chancery Division) – March 8th, 1967

(Before Mr Justice STAMP)

Income tax – Civil Defence Corps bounty – Whether assessable under Schedule E – Civil Defence Act 1946, section 1 – Income Tax Act 1952, section 457 (4) – Civil Defence Corps (Organization and Bounty) Warrant 1962, paragraph 10.

The taxpayer, the respondent, received a Civil Defence Corps bounty of £15. The Civil Defence Corps was constituted, pursuant to the Civil Defence Act 1948, as a civil defence force for Great Britain. Civil defence has been authoritatively described as the defence of the country by any means short of military action against the effects of hostile attack. The Civil Defence Corps consists of volunteers enrolled by the Secretary of State or by such authorities or persons as he may authorize, local divisions being organized by local authorities under his direction. The Civil Defence Corps is a Crown service; but the bounty is paid out of the funds of the local authority, and the latter is reimbursed out of central government funds.

It was contended for the taxpayer that the Civil Defence Corps was one of the 'reserve and auxiliary forces of the Crown'; and that the bounty was paid 'out of the public revenue' within the meaning of those phrases in section 457 (4) of the Income Tax Act 1952. The General Commissioners decided in favour of the taxpayer.

Held: the bounty was not payable 'out of the public revenue', and was therefore not within the exemption from assessment provided by section 457 (4).

Cleary v. C.I.R.

In the House of Lords – March 15th, 1967

Income tax – Transaction in securities – Sale of shares in a company – Purchaser company also controlled by taxpayer – Whether tax advantage obtained – Whether distribution of profit – Finance Act 1936, section 21 – Finance Act 1960, sections 28, 43.

In the first half of 1961 the appellant owned equally with her sister the whole of the issued share capital, namely, 200,000 shares of 1s each, in a company. The company had a credit balance on profit and loss account of £180,000, and it had a credit of £130,000 at its bank. The appellant also owned equally with her sister the whole of the issued shares, namely, 50,000 shares of £1 each, in another company. In July 1961 they each sold 22,000 shares in the second company to the first company for £60,500 in cash. That was the full value of the shares. The appellant and her sister continued to own all the issued shares in the first-mentioned company, which in turn then held 44,000 shares in the second company.

It was contended that the appellant had obtained a tax advantage, within section 28 of the Finance Act 1960, consisting of the avoidance of an assessment or possible assessment to income tax, which would have been made, if £60,500 had been distributed to them by way of dividend. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that no tax advantage within section 28 had been obtained. The Special Commissioners decided in favour of the appellant.

Held (affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal): (1) the appellant received the sums in question in connection with the distribution of profits of the first company; (2) in that way the appellant obtained a tax advantage; (3) section 28 was applicable to the case.

Davies Jenkins & Co Ltd v. Davies

Income tax – Subvention payment – Cessation of recipient's trade before payment – Whether subvention payment deductible by payer – Finance Act 1953, section 20 – Finance Act 1954, section 18.

The appellant company made payments to another company, and the payments qualified as subvention payments for the purposes of section 20 of the Finance Act 1953, subject to the question whether the payments were invalid because they had been received by the other company after it had ceased to trade. The Special Commissioners decided that the payments ranked as subvention payments.

Held (reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal) (Lord Guest dissenting): the Special Commissioners' decision was correct.

Reviews

The Merchant Bankers

by JOSEPH WECHSBERG

Weidenfeld & Nicholson, London. 42s.

This is a book written for enjoyment and to be read as such. Already the chairman of one of the banks not specifically examined in the book has written publicly that some at least of Mr Wechsberg's stories are apochryphal. Never mind. The stories are the ones we would like to believe and, true or not, reflect the approach and philosophy of the merchant banker whether he will admit it or not. The author is as kind-hearted to his subject as anyone would be whose grandfather was a merchant banker himself before the First World War.

What we have then is a fascinating study of the origins and practices of seven of the well-known names in merchant banking, four of them London and international, one Italian, one German and one Wall Street.

Some of the book has been serialized in The Sunday Times and some in The New Yorker. It is now produced in an elegant form, with a gold dust-cover, and is worth its price for its quiet entertainment.

However much our merchant banking friends may plead that theirs is a prosaic business no more romantic than, say, accountancy or discount broking, we cannot but suspect Mr Wechsberg is pretty near the mark in the atmosphere he creates.

Analytical Auditing

by R. M. SKINNER, F.C.A., and R. J. ANDERSON, C.A.

Sir Isaac Pitman (Canada) Ltd. 50s.

This is a most readable book of considerable interest to both external and internal auditors. The object of the book is to sell the flow-chart approach to auditing, which it does extremely well. In explaining flow charting the authors set the background to ancient and modern auditing so clearly that this is a book to be recommended to students, and public accountants wondering how to convert their practices to flow charting, as well as to managers and accountants in industry wishing to understand what is being done to them and what to expect from it.

The authors are Canadian with six years' practical experience in flow charting and they show conclusively how the flow-charting approach fully meets generally accepted auditing standards. As yet flow charting is the minority approach in Britain, and only one of the big firms is known to use it. The authors dismiss the alternative detailed narrative style of systems audit programme as being inefficient – a contentious point to say the least.

The one main criticism of the book is that the flow charts illustrated are too sophisticated. A very high degree of charting ability is needed to match this standard, the charts being too detailed and involved for the general reader to follow with ease. The outline flow charts appended as a 'tourist guide' to the flow charts proper, serve to emphasize this point.

The keying-in of audit depth-test routines to the flow charts by means of an audit strip appended to the flow chart is a good idea. It serves to emphasize the important point that such tests are aimed at corroborating the system as well as testing its operation. The illustrations would indicate that separate audit working papers of depth tests carried out are not used in this system. In Britain, depth tests are usually drawn up in separate working schedule form and may include explanatory flow charts of the depth-test procedures.

The concept of limited management audit is clearly brought out, but the text concentrates on the period under review and does not give much consideration to continuing business or the trading cycle, though the section on statistical audit – the business man's appraisal – is part compensation for this fault. A noticeable omission is the failure to integrate the system's flow charts with the organization charts of the business under audit.

A useful chapter is devoted to flow charting punched-card and computer systems. However, in reading the text, allowance should be made for recent and continuing advances in computer audit technique. Another valuable feature is the suggested audit treatment of weaknesses in internal control thrown out by analytical auditing. Audit practice in Britain and doubtless elsewhere – could benefit from the clear thinking produced in this most worth-while book.

The British Monopolies Commission

George Allen & Unwin Ltd, London. 50s.

This is a comprehensive study in which both theoretical and practical aspects of monopoly with particular reference to the state of affairs in British industry are examined.

Starting with the development of public concern with the growth of monopolies during the First World War and after, Dr Rowley examines the Monopolies Commission and the various trades association inquiries. He then turns to consider the operation of the definition of a dominant firm in British industry in the light of the 1948 legislation and an interesting chapter follows in which he seeks to estimate the problems of assessing the efficiency and costing of large firms. He concludes with two chapters on the economic consequences of Government action in this field and submits his own conclusions and recommendations. There is a useful bibliography appended.

This is a book for the specialist rather than the general reader, but any accountant involved in affairs of industry closely concerned with the operation of recent legislation will find much of interest.

Drawing the line

DRAWING the balance line at the end of the financial year is a necessary exercise but it is not necessarily a fully enlightening one. October 31st is the financial year-end of Alfred Herbert Ltd, of Coventry, the machine tool group, but as notes 12 and 13 to the accounts in this week's reprint indicate, the company had major commitments outstanding on two very considerable developments at October 31st.

These were the financial arrangements concerning the formation of Herbert-Ingersoll Ltd, and the acquisition of the machine tools division of The Birmingham Small Arms group. Shareholders in Herbert endorsed the agreement with the Ingersoll Milling Machine Co of Rockford, Illinois, on February 22nd this year and endorsed the B.S.A. deal the previous month.

The balance sheet at October 31st does not, of course, cover these developments but the chairman of Alfred Herbert, Mr R. D. Young, puts shareholders in the picture by giving the outline of what, in the current idiom, may be described as a 'mini balance sheet' on the basis of inclusion of the Ingersoll and B.S.A. assets.

Outline balance sheet

'In broad outline', Mr Young says, 'the group position is now, early in 1967, as follows:

Capital and reserves				£
Issued capital	..	..	..	19,938,000
7½ per cent debentures	..	..	..	2,500,000
Capital reserve	..	..	..	4,105,000
Revenue reserve	..	..	..	7,147,000
				£33,690,000

Assets				£
Fixed assets	..	..	..	8,099,000
Trade investments	..	..	..	2,226,000
Net current assets	..	..	..	23,365,000
				£33,690,000

The figures are based on the Herbert accounts as at October 31st, 1966, and the Herbert-B.S.A. figures at July 31st, 1966, and give effect to the subsequent issue of the debenture and the investment in The Ingersoll Milling Machine Co. The investment in Herbert-Ingersoll itself will be implemented in the near future and is not featured in the above figures. The effect would be to put £1½ million on to the fixed assets with a corresponding reduction in net current assets.

Herbert-Ingersoll is a 51 per cent Herbert subsidiary for special purpose machine tools; plant for the company is being built at Daventry. Purchase of the B.S.A. Machine Tool Division adds one million square feet to the Herbert group's factory space - bringing it to four million - and another 4,000 people to the payroll.

Difficult year

As the accounts show, 1965-66 was a difficult time for the Herbert group so far as earnings were concerned. Pre-tax profits were back from £5,402,545 to £4,755,954, although the figures are not directly comparable because the financial years of all subsidiaries have this time been brought into line with the parent. This change added some £135,000 to the 1965-66 group profit.

Total sales rose by some 3 per cent, but what they rose from and to in money terms is not stated. Presumably the figures will have to be given in the current year's accounts. Prices were virtually fixed and rising costs had to be absorbed. Higher spending was authorized on design and development among other things.

Turnover was hampered to some degree by output interruptions caused by the bringing into production of a new generation of machines. Dividend was held at 16.17 per cent with the heavy effect on retentions that the accounts show.

'The company's financial resources', the chairman says, 'amply cover present needs. But, with demand weaker of late, a (dividend) forecast one way or the other would be premature until the outcome of the current year's trading can be foreseen.'

Alfred Herbert's interim statement is usually made in mid-July and, by that time, the board should have a reasonable indication of the current year profit prospect, and more particularly of production prospects.

Cycle of demand

The basic problem in the machine tool industry is the cycle of demand which is a matter of Government economic policy above all. Years of recurring 'Stop-Go' economics have meant that the machine tool industry has either been short of orders during the 'Stop' period or swamped with orders and forced to extend delivery dates during the periods of 'Go'.

During the 'Go' periods the industry is invariably accused of being unable to supply home market needs and of harming the balance of payments by enforcing a need to import machine tools from abroad. During the 'Stop' periods the industry has in the past been accused of inadequate research and development and a failure to exploit opportunities open to it in the export markets.

The Alfred Herbert company has put to the Government an 'anti-cyclical' scheme which would help the industry to maintain production during the 'Stop' periods. Although the scheme has been accepted as sound, the Government, so far, has not seen fit to put it into operation.

The present situation is that the industry seems likely to be moving out of a slack order position into a better order and production period, although this is likely to develop too late to have any really beneficial effect on Alfred Herbert's 1966-67 earnings.

CITY NOTES

HAVING squeezed the last drops of bullishness from the standstill Budget and the Conservative election gains, the equity market is showing signs of drying up. Now that the prospect of reflation is put farther in the future, the equity market can no longer sustain current levels, at least in index terms. If reflationary moves are not to be made until midsummer at the very earliest – and probably not until the autumn – then 1967 industrial profit figures are not going to look particularly bright.

As the industrial profit picture moves from the 1966 to the 1966-67 view – that is to say from companies reporting profits to March 31st, 1967, as against December 1966 – the impact of last July's restrictions on earnings will become increasingly evident.

If this evidence comes when the equity market is receding from an over-hopeful position, then the effect on individual share prices may be severe. Take-over hopes and other special situations will take the edge off an equity fall, but some stockbrokers consider that in Financial Times Ordinary Share Index terms the market could drop twenty points and more.

THE dangers inherent in Government spending at a level which seems to preclude a necessary advance in spending in the private sector of the economy is a recurring theme in current economic comment. Mr Desmond Longe, President of the Norwich Union Insurance Group, said this week, in his annual review, that there is 'a real danger that unless Government expenditure is curbed we shall become progressively less competitive abroad and more subject to recurring inflation at home'. Maintaining that there is no better way of increasing efficient production than by stimulating profits in the private sector, Mr Longe said: 'We in the insurance industry take the view that the right way to tackle excess consumer demand is to make personal saving more worth while.'

LONDON stockbrokers Cazenove & Co, who two years ago prepared a survey The North Sea and Offshore Drilling, have brought that survey up to date and have enlarged it considerably. The brokers' latest review covers the various steps taken to produce oil or gas once it has been found and refers to the problems to be tackled in bringing the fuels to market. The review also contains a detailed account of the activities of the various consortia involved.

It is interesting to note that the review does not go out to suggest investment opportunities. 'It seems to us', the brokers say, 'that the benefits are likely to be fairly thinly spread except in certain obvious cases, such as the manufacturers of gas appliances, where the additional activity may be compressed into a disturbingly short period of time and not provide the type of steady and continuous growth for which investors rightly seek.'

THE banking world is marshalling its forces for the financing of the channel tunnel project. Hill Samuel, Kleinwort Benson and Midland Bank are the three British members of the strongest looking group so far formed. With the British banks are five French banks and one Italian plus the First Boston Corporation, the leading investment bankers in the United States. Government estimates have put the tunnel's cost at £170 million. Hill Samuel, leading the ten banks' group, are inclined to put the cost nearer £200 million – much nearer.

The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants

Sixty-second Annual General Meeting

THE sixty-second annual general meeting of The Association of Certified and Corporate Accountants was held in London on Tuesday, with the President, Mr W. Sholto Olleson, T.D., F.A.C.C.A., in the chair.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

In the course of his address, the President said:

As President of the Association I am privileged to submit to you the report of the Council and the accounts of the Association for the year 1966.

Mr W. Sholto Olleson

Over the years it has been the melancholy task of most presidents of the Association to commence their annual addresses by reference to those members of Council whose services have been lost during the preceding twelve months by reason of death. This year, I fear, is no different and to me there has unhappily fallen a task of special sadness in that I must speak of a former member of Council outstanding not only in the work which he did for the Association, but also in the regard and affection in which his colleagues held him. I refer, of course, to Mr J. E. Harris, who died in May last at the early age of 43 years.

We may take as established beyond question his high degree of technical ability and integrity, both personal and professional. He was, in fact, a member of the Association for only twenty-three years and during that time he rose to the very top of his profession and in so doing displayed such qualities as could not fail to secure the respect and regard of all those who met him. It is, indeed, true to say with the utmost sincerity that it was impossible not to like him. People with outstanding ability and to whom success comes swiftly not infrequently attract the jealousy of others. It is perhaps the greatest tribute that I can pay to Jack Harris to say that his personal attributes were such that persons less successful than he never even thought of being jealous or resentful. This, I am sure, was because of Jack's deep sense of consideration for others – an attitude of mind which repeatedly caused him to go to endless trouble to help others. It was a strange, but endearing, contradiction in his make-up that a man who had so little time for himself, always had time for other people.

You might suppose from what I have said that Jack Harris was an essentially serious kind of person. In a way I suppose he was and it is certainly true that he approached serious matters in a serious way. But coupled with this was a delightful and warm-hearted sense of humour which was apt to bubble through in almost any situation and this was one of the things that made him such a delightful companion.

I have also to refer to the impending retirement of Mr J. P. Shaw who happily is with us today. Mr Shaw has served on the Council since 1952 and prior to that had a long connection with the London District Society, of which he was both honorary secretary and subsequently president. It is on members who, like Mr Shaw, give long years of selfless service that the strength of the Association is founded and it is a matter for regret that such members are less numerous than they used to be. We shall miss Mr Shaw's cheerful presence and in expressing our appreciation of all that he has done, we extend to him our warmest good wishes for his future health and happiness.

Before proceeding to the report there is one other matter which I must mention and I do so with considerable pleasure. You are all aware of Lord Latham's services to the Association, but you may be less familiar with those which he has rendered to the profession at large. Apart from his membership of a number of joint professional committees he has served for many years on the Accountants' Advisory Committee of the Board of Trade, which is a personal and not a representative appointment. In recognition of these many services the Council decided to elect Lord Latham to honorary membership of the Association and at the same time to set up a permanent prize, to be known as the Lord Latham Prize, which will be awarded at each examination to the candidate achieving the best performance in the paper on Advanced Costing in Section III of the professional examination.

Finance

Our accounts for 1966 disclose a gross surplus of about the same figure as in the previous year. This actually represents a far greater achievement than may appear on the surface for we have taken the opportunity to write down several items, such as furniture, library and presidential badges, which previously stood in the balance sheet at figures which were scarcely realistic.

The actual costs of administration continue to rise and are likely to show a sharp increase in the current year when the rigours of the freeze are mitigated. Quite apart from that, however, the cost of accommodation will increase because from March 1st we acquired a lease of the greater part of the premises at No. 23 Bedford Square which immediately adjoins our present building.

This is not the answer to our long-standing problem of accommodation. But it will provide some very welcome relief for our present serious overcrowding and if, as we hope, we can get permission to make a means of access between the upper floors of the two buildings, this should create a convenient and workable arrangement.

Membership

Both my predecessors in office have expressed the view that a satisfactory rate of increase in membership would be of the order of 500 new members per annum. In 1965 the figure was approximately four hundred and it is again about the same for 1966. While this is not unsatisfactory in the sense that we have at least lost no ground, we have no particular reason for self-congratulation when one bears in mind the very considerable increase in students over recent years. It is, of course, the case that it normally takes some five years for such an increase to be reflected in the membership figure, but one cannot help wondering whether this will, in fact, take place while failure rates at the professional examination remain so high.

It is clear that these two factors are very closely linked and I am bound to say that the examination results continue to give us some anxiety. A few years ago we conducted an inquiry into the examinations to ensure that we were not expecting too much and we reported at the time that the results of this inquiry did provide that assurance. One is therefore left with the feeling that far too many students enter the examinations without adequate preparation. Indeed, one can hardly resist the conclusion that many of them approach the matter well knowing that they are inadequately prepared, thus perhaps arguing that they have nothing to lose but are buoyed up by the thought that by some strange combination of chance and good fortune they may even manage to scrape through. I would like to emphasize to all such students that nowadays luck plays very little part indeed in most professional examinations and that there is only one formula for success, namely, a thorough and conscientious preparation.

Over the years we have endeavoured to improve the educational facilities available to students and undoubtedly our most successful effort has been the week-end school for students at New College, Oxford. The 1966 school there has just been completed and was attended by Mr Lediard Smith, Mr Newport and myself. I am sure that I am speaking for us all when I say that we were most impressed by the quality of these students, by the way in which they worked in their participation sessions and by their questions. I can recall that in the beginning we were a little haunted by the fear that places at the week-end school would tend to be monopolized by students who believed that it constituted some sort of substitute for regular and conscientious study, leading to instant success at the examinations. We have all been very glad to see, however, that is not at all what has happened and that practically all those attending the week-end school are there because they are interested in their studies and keen to improve themselves.

Developments in the wider field of education continue apace and it is even a matter of some difficulty to keep up with them. It is, of course, essential to maintain an attitude of mind which is flexible and adaptable and this we are endeavouring to do.

Perhaps the most important change affecting us during the year was the Government's action in relation to the creation of polytechnics. It is clearly the intention that all advanced level work shall ultimately be carried out in polytechnics and while in the long run this may work out very well, we cannot help being extremely anxious about the transitional period. There are, for example, a number of colleges of further education at which the teaching of accountancy and allied subjects has been developed to a very high degree, but not all of these colleges have been designated as polytechnics. On the other hand, some polytechnics have as yet no accountancy departments and it may well take some years to develop them. Clearly, therefore, it would be quite disastrous if the non-designated colleges are not able to continue their activities until that moment arrives.

But the non-designated colleges are in a state of considerable uncertainty about their future and this may well make it difficult for them to retain their highly-trained staffs. If this happens it will be impossible for the non-designated colleges to carry on and the great danger is that this inability may manifest itself before some of the polytechnics are ready to take over. We should then be left with a growing hiatus in teaching facilities which would be extremely serious and I hope that the Department of Education and Science and local education authorities will bear in mind the need to make some immediate and comprehensive plans covering this transitional period.

I hope also that the Government will not adhere rigidly to any preconceived plan as to the number of polytechnics necessary. Those at present designated are geographically ill-distributed and there are certain parts of the country where there are large areas without a polytechnic. I am, of course, aware that the Department of Education and Science has said that students must get used to travelling to their place of instruction, but this is really nonsense when you have to deal with students who are in employment and whose studies are therefore on a part-time basis only. The distance which such students can fairly be expected to travel is quite limited and certainly not anything like the distances which would be involved as the plan stands at the moment.

Research

Once again we have to express our sincerest thanks to those members of the Association who have continued to assist us with our technical work. This has increased greatly during 1966, though paradoxically enough we have produced only one publication, namely, the booklet entitled Back Duty Practice Notes. This booklet was sent to all practising members of the Association in January of this year and has been the subject of numerous letters of approbation from members—as well as three of disapproval. Although issued to members free of charge, it is also available to other members of the profession at a nominal cost of 2s 6d per copy, post free.

In spite of this small visible output the amount of technical work to be carried out has—as I have said—been larger than ever. Apart from our normal submissions to the Chancellor both before the Budget and on the Finance Bill, we were invited by the Board of Trade to submit comments on proposed changes in the law relating to the accounts of insurance companies and subsequently on the remainder of the Companies Bill. In addition we were also invited to assist in the development of the investment grant plan and in both cases we worked jointly with the English and Scottish Institutes. We have also been asked for evidence by the Decimal Currency Council and this, too, is being tackled as a joint operation.

The Budget

The Budget of 1967 has been described as neutral. This description is perhaps appropriate inasmuch as the Budget does nothing. This is possibly a mercy if one may judge by the standards of recent years, when chaos has been piled upon confusion.

One must, of course, welcome the decision to introduce relief from 50 per cent of selective employment tax for part-time employees. This tax was misconceived in any event, but the removal of one of the more glaring of its many anomalies is to be received with gratitude. One must also welcome the decision to abolish the mineral rights duty. This was an anachronism in terms of modern taxation and the Association first recommended its abolition several years ago. It would perhaps be churlish to say that it is a pity that this modest reform has taken so long to accomplish, but for many years the net yield has been minute, and the duty has had no more than nuisance value.

It was no doubt predictable that the Chancellor would make threatening noises about tax avoidance. The Inland Revenue already has very wide powers and indeed one has only to look at the uses to which section 28 of the Finance Act 1960 is being put; uses which certainly were not in the mind of the Legislature when the Act became law.

Anti-avoidance legislation has an uncomfortable habit of being so widely and vaguely drawn as to embrace transactions far beyond those at which it is allegedly aimed. Much of this legislation is very bad, and if evidence of this were needed one need go no further than the comments of the learned judges in the House of Lords in the recent case of Bates v. C.I.R. There would be far less need to talk of anti-avoidance legislation, which year after year has increased complexities without really achieving anything of value, if a really genuine attempt were made to simplify the tax system. The corporation tax has been alleged to be a simplification measure. Every accountant knows that it has merely added to the tremendous problems facing the business community. My predecessors have drawn attention to these problems in successive years, and have indeed suggested that if matters got much worse, anyone faced with any sort of business problem, or even the mere need to complete a tax return, would need an accountant at his elbow.

It is interesting to notice that many powerful voices are now joining the chorus of protest. The chairman of I.C.I., Sir Paul Chambers, has drawn attention to the serious position which companies face as a result of our fiscal policies and the recent remarks of Sir Geoffrey Eley, chairman of Thomas Tilling Ltd, are further evidence of a widespread and profound dissatisfaction. Some years ago the Association in its pre-Budget recommendation to the Chancellor of the Exchequer suggested consultation with our profession and with the legal profession to initiate real reforms. The profession has the expert knowledge and experience and if the Chancellor seriously desires to improve the taxation systems I invite him to take advantage of that knowledge and experience. He has only to ask.

Future of the profession

No doubt you have all carefully read that section of the annual report dealing with the future of the accountancy profession. This is an agreed statement between the six participating bodies and for this reason you will not expect me to add anything to it.

We have indicated the general lines which the discussions have followed and the objectives which we have been seeking to achieve. We had, indeed, hoped that we might receive some specific help from the Board of Trade, but the reference to the Monopolies Commission of all the professions, so far as concerns practices which might be considered restrictive, has understandably placed the Board in a position of some difficulty, at any rate until the Monopolies Commission has submitted its report. We are therefore faced with the alternatives of awaiting that report or proceeding with the consideration of the scheme on the basis that no legislative support will be forthcoming in the immediate future. If it is decided to go ahead now, the first task of the Joint Steering Committee must be, I think, to re-examine the scheme in the light of the absence of legislative support and to make such modifications to it as that position is deemed to demand.

As soon as we are in a position to do so we shall make a further announcement and we hope that that will be during the summer. In the meantime I would ask you to continue to exercise the patience which you have already shown, knowing as you do that these are matters which cannot be hurried and which must be considered with the greatest possible care. In particular I would ask you not to reach any conclusions on the basis of so-called 'inside information', but to await an official communication which will contain the whole of the information you require in order to reach a balanced view.

Acknowledgements

Finally I would like to spend a few minutes to express my personal appreciation of the goodwill and help which I have received during my year of office. Though one must accept the office of president with pride, one can, in fairness, only do so with a full appreciation of its responsibilities. The involvements of the presidency do not grow fewer and the task is now one of such constant commitment that it would be impossible for any man to take it on without the assurance of co-operation from his colleagues. This, I may say, is always forthcoming and it is with a feeling of real indebtedness that I acknowledge the willing and ready support of my vice-president, Mr Landau, who, in spite of his own busy life has never failed me and has, indeed, deputized for me more frequently than has been necessary in the past. In the same way I am deeply grateful to my other colleagues on the Council, and especially to those on the Executive Committee, whose advice and support has been constantly at my disposal.

As you know, the office of president involves constant and sometimes prolonged absences from home and one's ordinary activities, and I should therefore like to take this opportunity of thanking my staff for the really tremendous way in which they have backed me up. Without their devotion and co-operation the whole project would have been impossible.

I have – as every president must have – a special word of thanks for our staff at headquarters. Our secretary and assistant secretaries are always at the disposal of the president, together with the other staff at 22 Bedford Square. This same acknowledgement has been regularly made in the past – no doubt in very similar terms – but I should like you all to know that it is in no sense perfunctory, but is made with very real feelings of gratitude and appreciation.

The motion for the adoption of the report of the Council and the accounts of the Association for 1966 was then seconded by the Vice-President and carried unanimously.

Structure and Finance of the Social Services

I.M.T.A. Week-end Conference

THE structure and finance of the social services' was the subject of a recent week-end conference organized by The Institute of Municipal Treasurers and Accountants at Harrogate. Participants to a large extent comprised treasurers of counties, county boroughs and districts, but included a large number of others in the social service industry from pretty well all the ministries having social service responsibilities – the Ministry of Health, the Home Office, the Ministry of Housing and Local Government, the Department of Economic Affairs, the Department of Education and Science, the Treasury, a substantial number of hospital finance officers, a sprinkling of medical officers, town clerks, children's officers, and enterprisingly enough a few people like the general manager and secretary of the Sutton Dwellings Trust.

The first speaker was Mr Douglas Houghton (M.P., ex-Minister, now Chairman of the Parliamentary Labour Party) who presented with uninhibited gusto his personal and highly controversial views about the way the social services were organized, the way he thought they should have been organized, the contributions of the various governments, and his misgivings about the efficacy with which the country could solve the problems that it was going to be faced with in social services in the course of the next two or three decades.

Future courses of action

This preoccupation with the future turned out to be a good trend-setter to the general tone of the conference. It was, in general, the sort of conference where people were groping after courses of action that they could follow in the future, rather than recriminating about the grievances of the past. It does no justice at all to Mr Houghton's lively and enlightened analysis to comment on the highlights of his speech; everybody, politics notwithstanding, was in support of social services; the only political differences were over the charges for the services; the amount of growth of the services, and the great question that was coming up in the future in the light of their growth and the disappointing development of the rate of increase of gross national product, was the extent of the limit of pre-emption of private incomes to support them.

Mr Houghton produced his own pet scheme – a sort of personal rehash of the Liberal Party manifesto of 1949 – under which, instead of creating a dozen different agencies for National Assistance, unemployment benefits, rates rebate, rent rebate, and differential charges for further education according to income, concessionary bus fares, etc., he would simply use the P.A.Y.E. coding system both for taxing on the one hand, and for giving the necessary financial support of families without adequate financial resources on the other hand. He placed great emphasis on the semantics of the social security industry. It wouldn't be regarded as the best buy if one called it charity. It was a gross mistake ever to call it Public Assistance, but when one referred to it as something that was supplemental, it provided the social service with a good image and high marketability.

A sharp contrast was provided by the Accountant-General of the Ministry of Health, Mr F. A. Adams, C.B.E., who with delicate skill dissected the State machinery for social service provision, and held up each part for inspection. Here, one felt, was a piece of masterly and precise indexing and cataloguing of the elements and financial structure of the central governmental sector of the social services.

Improving social health

This cold analysis, however, turned out to be the calm before the breeze, for in the following session Mr L. Copplestone, F.I.M.T.A., County Treasurer of Salop, had his turn. He started from the premise that the big change in social services, as rendered by the local authorities, was that what was once charity is now the right of the individual and he proceeded to identify the train of events which led from the time when the social conscience of the nation rested within the bosom of the family to the present time when it was now resting almost internationally with supranational bodies. Charity no longer begins at home; it begins at Oxfam. Moreover, social service is not now orientated towards the casualty but towards positive ends of improving the general social welfare and social health of the nation.

Mr Copplestone identified the appropriate unit for welfare and social service – 'home is where one starts from' – and then proceeded to identify some of the problems: too many housing authorities to be properly co-ordinated; housing authorities at a different local authority level from that of Children's Officer; the gap that existed between central and local government services, and the lack of close working between them; the policy of 'government by circular' from Whitehall which did not recognize the differing needs of Bournemouth and Blyth; Government departments which did not speak with one voice, let alone with a common voice; too many departments of State dealing with health and welfare problems; a deplorable lack of research; the problems of co-operation between local authorities and the hospitals; the pathetic obsolescence of closely-drawn boundaries, and the awful temptation to administrators of letting their own convenience precede the welfare and convenience of people.

Then Mr P. R. Kaim-Caudle, Tutor in Social Theory and Institutions at the University of Durham, talked about choice of social services in the Welfare State. It was not difficult to divine Mr Kaim-Caudle's views. Although the cost of the Welfare State was increasing and was likely to increase further, for a variety of cogent reasons the nation could well afford it from the increasing wealth that would be generated by the annual increases in the gross national product in the future.

The benefits that the State would be able to provide for its citizenry would be superior to anything which could be provided by individuals themselves. There would be no relief from the taxation necessary to provide them for those who chose to provide their own services. The services would become more expensive and in many cases the large-scale provision of State services was far more economic than could be provided by a competitive industry catering for individual choices. However much one might have felt that Mr Kaim-Caudle's approach lacked an air of academic detachment, the panache and verve of his exposition kept everyone arguing furiously until dinner time that evening.

Although the standard of addresses was above the vast majority of conferences, it was in the process of question and answer under the skilful guidance of Sir Richard Clarke (Permanent Secretary to the Ministry of Technology), chairman of the conference, that the conference was most notable. The wide participation from members of differing professions, differing interests, different areas of the country, and different types of organizations, provided a stimulating, intimate and fascinatingly interesting programme of real education. It remained for Sir Richard to sum-up the key points – the need to take a positive and constructive view of the changing nature of social service and its demands on the economy, to look to the organizational problems which had been exposed in the process of dissertation and discussion, and for each participant to see what he could do in his own field to pursue their resolution.

Full marks to the I.M.T.A. for organizing the conference. It was undoubtedly of great value to those who attended, and to the general cause of social service development.

Planning and Forecasting in Industry

Cost Accountants' Conference

AS briefly noted in last week's issue, over one hundred and twenty accountants in industry met for a residential week-end conference at the University of Keele from Friday to Sunday, April 14th to 16th. The conference, on the theme 'Planning and forecasting for industry', was organized by the West Midlands Area Co-ordinating Committee of The Institute of Cost and Works Accountants.

At the first session, under the chairmanship of Mr Stanley J. Careless, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., A.A.C.C.A., J.DIP.M.A., a paper entitled 'Introduction to planning and forecasting in industry' was presented by Mr Colin Hill, B.Sc. (ECON.), director of group economic planning, Pressed Steel Fisher Ltd. Mr Hill succinctly outlined the purpose of planning: Where have we been? Where are we now? Where do we want to go? How do we get there?

Minimizing risk

The process of planning presupposes these questions and formulates the answers, he stated, and forecasts and plans were aimed at minimizing, or providing against, the element of risk. Business growth he saw as increased cash flow available to a company, and he stressed the importance of specifying the main objectives, and of realism in setting growth targets. He regarded planning as starting at the marketing end of the business and outlined the main planning techniques, dealing with forecasting methods, and the problems in long-term forecasting.

Mr D. G. Gittos, B.A.(HONS)(OXON), market research and media manager, Alfred Bird & Sons Ltd, was introduced by the chairman at the second session, Mr P. J. Custis, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A. The paper presented by Mr Gittos – 'Marketing and product development' – dealt with the recent history of planning activities at the national level. The variables in the present situation, he said, whereby assumptions and predictions about their relative magnitudes and inter-relationships in the future were made, were themselves illuminated to a higher degree than hitherto. One of the dominant factors in this situation was the computer. Information – the raw material of planning – having been gathered, trends, projections, forecasts, etc. could be proceeded with. Mr Gittos briefly considered such factors as changes in stock levels, the effects of price changes, the influence of advertising and other sales promotion activities, as well as the effects of Government actions in relation to a company's planning.

The chairman at the third plenary session, Mr F. Fisher, A.C.W.A., introduced the author of the paper entitled 'Production', Mr A. F. Holdaway, B.Sc.(ECON.), consultant with the Corporation for Economic and Industrial Research Ltd. Mr Holdaway considered some of the unsatisfactory elements in industry today, particularly over-long delivery times and broken delivery promises. He sketched the development of planning and control techniques, and the relationship between costs and manufacturing times.

There were distinguishing features in production control which had no exact counterpart in budgetary control, and the paper identified the main difference. This was seen in the need for costs to be associated with cost centres, whereas production control must recognize specific orders, or lots.

Financial planning

The final session, under the chairmanship of Mr G. E. Scott, A.C.W.A., was concerned with the consideration of a paper on 'Finance', by Mr J. F. Body, F.C.A., F.C.W.A., J.DIP.M.A., group chief accountant, Newton Chambers & Co Ltd. The paper stated the general principles of financial planning applicable to all companies irrespective of size and industry. Proceeding to the practice, Mr Body noted the tendency towards the preparation of long-term forecasts. He stressed the need for planning for growth, and emphasized the importance of measuring return on capital in connection with current investment and future projected investment.

The general principles governing short-term budgeting were stated and consideration was given to the various sources of information, fixing the level of sales, and pricing policy. Costing problems for direct costs, indirect costs, and fixed expenses were referred to by Mr Body, and more detailed treatment was accorded to capital, cash flow, and reporting of results.

In addition to the technical papers, an address was given after dinner on Saturday by Dr A. Wilkinson, B.A., PH.D., on the subject 'English as she is spoke'. This was an entertaining feature, much enjoyed by conference members.

The conference concluded with a summing up by Mr J. P. Wilson,

F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S., a Past President of the Institute.

Those attending included the President of the Institute, Mr W. L. Spalding, B.Sc.(ECON.), C.A., F.C.W.A., F.C.I.S.; the President of the Stoke-on-Trent Branch of the Institute, Mr A. W. Cartwright, F.C.W.A., F.A.C.C.A., and the Senior Technical Officer of the Institute, Mr R. W. Duffield, F.C.W.A.

Sometimes it seems that the easiest stage of a real technical advance is the idea itself, and that the more difficult stages are its application, development and eventual marketing. For these stages finance is needed, and it is frustrating to conceive the idea and then be unable to raise the money to exploit it.

T.D.C. was formed to meet this need—to assist companies, associations or individuals who have made a substantial technical advance but are held up for finance at the commercial stage. If you think that T.D.C. could help, begin by sending for our booklet 'Capital for Technical Innovation'.

THE INSTITUTE OF TAXATION

Extracts from the speech by the President, MR GEORGE WHILLANS, F.T.I.L., F.I.B., F.R.Econ.S., at the Annual General Meeting held in London on April 25th, 1967.

In his Budget speech the Chancellor indicated that he would be examining the question of tax avoidance. This will, no doubt, result in the introduction of anti-avoidance legislation at some future date and, while nobody can disagree with this in principle, I am sure that I am expressing the unanimous wish of everybody who is engaged in taxation work that the Chancellor would be well advised to consider very seriously whether it is desirable to introduce any additional legislation for some considerable time. The Institute has reminded the Chancellor of the tremendous pressure which has been put on the professions and on the Inland Revenue staff by the proliferation of legislation which has been introduced recently — no less than seven complex financial Acts within the last two years.

This year's Finance Bill is not yet available but it is anticipated that it will contain a number of provisions to rectify shortcomings in the drafting of the Finance Act, 1965 and the Finance Act, 1966. The anomalies and even absurdities arising out of the 1965 Act are well known and are too numerous to deal with individually but it is appalling to think that two years later amending legislation has still to be introduced and, before this has been done, we are being threatened with still more legislation which is bound to be of a complex nature.

Surely it would be desirable to clear up the present muddle before starting to create the next one!

MANUAL OF AUDITING by Vivian R. V. Cooper, F.C.A.

UNITED KINGDOM

79s 6d post free U.K.

In recent years the whole approach to auditing has changed. The old concepts of routine checking and vouching have gone and new standards are being set and new procedures evolved. This has become more than ever necessary by the increasing use of computers for which auditing techniques now have to be designed.

Taking as his starting-point the system of internal control installed by management, the auditor's task is to point out the weaknesses to his client and to make a tailor-made audit programme to fit the job in which test of the day-to-day transactions are cut to a minimum. The auditor now observes, at regular intervals, the physical stock-taking carried out by his client's staff; if his report to shareholders is not to be qualified, he requires his client to maintain a higher standard of book-keeping and accounts than hitherto. His audit is carefully planned and is backed by a well defined system for the preparation, filing and presentation of working papers.

This book, which includes a comprehensive set of specimen forms and schedules, is the first of its kind in the United Kingdom which sets out these modern techniques and procedures in a readily understandable form. It is essentially practical and, except for a few changes necessary to make it suitable for publication, is based on the manual which has been developed over a long period of years, and is in daily use, by a firm of chartered accountants in practice.

ANOTHER BOOK
IN THE GEE'S
SERIES

How often in Industry do we find the Accountant attempting to produce sophisticated information without a solid accounting system on which to build? How many accounting organizations are operated on the 'two-tier' system of financial accounting and cost accounting without integration?

The integrated system outlined in this manual is a practical system, the integrated nominal ledger used in the system is the key to the whole operation, it can be read like a book, to reveal all the essential details of the factory's activity. Production of reliable, speedy, Management Accounts and statistics is almost a simple operation.

The author has found that, during his thirteen years in Industry, there are many firms without a reliable Management Accounting system and also many who have little or no understanding of the real meaning of 'integration'. The author also found that while studying for professional qualifications and seeking practical experience early in his career that there appeared to be very few, if any, books available which dealt with the complete accounting system, especially in the engineering industry to which this book is primarily directed.

It is considered that this book is the first publication to lay down the complete accounting system for the engineering industry which will be invaluable to students, accountants in industry, and also accountants in practice.

This complete system has been successfully introduced in engineering factories producing a wide variety of products, both as single units, and in factories linked to a central organization. Once this basic system has been introduced then sophistication can follow.

WEST INDIES

A rapidly expanding practice with a G.R.F. turnover of £10,000 p.a. (Dec. 1966) is available for sale. The practice, (at present run by a progressive young English chartered accountant), holds a monopoly position, and has a high grade clientele.

The Island, noted for its scenic beauty and first-class sailing facilities, is politically stable, and has a low cost of living. The Island administration enjoys a special dollar position, and the taxation structure is extremely favourable.

The practice, which is employing electronic data processing methods has a tremendous 'growth' potential. A working capital of £3,000 is necessary.

Our client is asking for £15,000. (Loan facilities are available), or he would consider a working arrangement. Due to the social climate on the Island, it is imperative that the buyer is a married man.

This is the first book especially designed and written to assist the cognizant executive in his choice of a computer system – and, through this more efficiently to plan for financial profits.

At the outset it is better to face the fact that management information systems are valuable only as long as they contribute to more effective operations. To help in this direction, the present book is very specific. It may also, in places, be controversial: only challenge can derust the old structures.

Management information systems do not develop the right way just by accident. Wise and profitable machine selection will not come about as a matter of chance. Efficiency with computers – as with any other industrial activity – definitely calls for acts of policy. Albeit, often ones that various persons and departments within the enterprise would greatly resent.

The computer (and the computer industry) has been so far a great international home of hoary myths. The time has come to demystify the whole affair. This calls for courage and for preparation. To that end, the book follows the preparatory phases through clear examples: from systems analysis, to unit runs, file specifications, programming, machine comparisons, computing estimates and the handling of the manufacturer, down to the time of decision.

Selecting the Computer System is designed to particularly appeal to:

- ★ Executives directly responsible for the choice of data processing equipment, and its implementation.
- ★ Senior executives, running operations or functional areas. (They will find in it material of substantial interest to their activities – provided they are determined to go beyond the superficial treatment of the subject.)
- ★ Graduate university students majoring in management, computers and information science.

Users of computer systems urgently need to act in a rational manner, if they are not to become toys in the hands of manufacturers. This is particularly important in 1967 when computers in business, industry and Government have past the embryonic stage. Lately, the men responsible for computer applications have come to realize that they have either to plan completely their systems work or they had better not plan at all.

The objective of the chapters treating the mechanics of the planning work is to answer challenging questions:

- ★ Where to start?
- ★ Whom to believe in following alternative ways and means in the implementation of an electronic system?
- ★ How to keep pace with change?
- ★ How to evaluate the profitability of automatic information handling?
- ★ How to identify and set the limits of cost expansion?
- ★ Where to base the decision on the use of more powerful electronic media?
- ★ How to distinguish facts from fiction?
